Concentrated Circulation in Houston

Texas cities are so prosperous, while the country districts of Texas' enormous area are so thinly populated, comparatively speaking, that the advertiser is most likely to be successful when concentrated local circulation is secured.

In other words, it pays to seek more CITY and SUBURBAN circulation and LESS country circulation than might be the case in New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Illinois, or Iowa.

The following tabulation of city and suburban circulations and rates is shown as a matter of interest. Figures for the Houston Press are net paid average for March, 1925. Figures for other papers are from April issue of Standard Rate and Data Service (the latest available when this advertisement was written).

Paper	CITY-Suburban	Rate
HOUSTON PRESS	27,185	8c
Dallas News	26,959	17c (5-thou. lines)
Fort Worth Star-Telegram	23,855	18c
Houston Chronicle	31,172	14c
Houston Post-Dispatch	33,080	12c

The Press offers circulation concentrated in city and suburbs at only 8c a line, the lowest rate of any Houston paper. Houston is the largest city in South Texas—an important seaport and one of the richest cities in the United States per capita.

The Press, because of its large concentrated local circulation leads all other Houston papers in local food and grocery advertising SIX DAYS AGAINST SEVEN, and carries more drug store advertising than all other Houston papers combined.

SPEED BOAT RACES, HISTORIC PAGEANT, FIREWORKS FOR DELEGATES MAY 11

Numerous Entertainment Features Await Houston Delegates —Trip Down Ship Canal to Precede Day's Ceremonies

HOUSTON intends to live up to her promise to entertain the delegates of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World in royal fashion, when they meet at the twenty-first annual convention, May 9 to 14. This is easily verified by referring to the program scheduled for the one afternoon and evening of Monday, May 11.

Adjoinment of departmental sessions will be in order promptly at 3:30; meanwhile, some 1,200 automobiles will be in waiting close to convention headquarters, ready to convey all delegates to the municipal wharves at the Port of Houston.

Once aboardship, a trip will be made down the Houston Ship Canal, en route to San Jacinto Battleground, giving the delegates an opportunity to view some of the great industrial plants which line the channel, and to gain a slight idea of the tremendous growth and expansion which will come to Houston in the future, the city which James J. Hill, empire-builder, predicted would one day house a million people.

On arrival at the battleground, the festivities will open with a series of speed boat races, under the auspices of the Houston Yacht Club, Commodore J. W. Weatherford and committee in charge.

Commodore Weatherford reports, the following schedule of races for the afternoon of May 11: First race begins at 5:00 sharp. A distance of 6 miles, using class 510 displacement boats. Prizes for this race will be as follows: 1st winner, $150.00; 2nd winner, $100.00 and 3rd winner, $50.00. Second race begins at 5:15, a distance of 6 miles. Between class 925 displacement boats. Prices, 1st winner, $150.00, 2nd winner, $100.00, and 3rd winner, $50.00. Third race, which will be a grand free-for-all, two high-powered hydroplanes participating. Prizes for this race are, 1st, $200.00, 2nd, $150.00, 3rd, $75.00 and 4th a pair of marine glasses donated by Geo. B. Carpenter & Co. (marine supply dealers) of Chicago. J. W. Sackrider, who made the donation for his company, is reported as being the official starter for all national races.

An added prize for the grand free-for-all, and one which will no doubt make it a hard fought race, will be a beautiful trophy (fittingly inscribed), donated by Mr. Milby Dow of the Dow Motor Company, for presentation in the name of the Houston Yacht Club. This trophy will be raced for each year; the racer winning for three consecutive years, becomes the permanent owner of the trophy.

The following entrants for the races have been named: Frank Robertson, who enters "Miss Houston the Second," a class 925 displacement boat, and "Miss Houston the Fourth," a hydroplane (in the free-for-all). Chas. K. Kuhlman enters "Miss Vanity," class 510 displacement boat. I. C. Ilfrey enters "Miss Genevieve," class 510 displacement boat; J. E. Sellman enters the second hydroplane, name not given. J. L. Bloodworth, of Galveston, enters (unnamed) 510 class displacement boat; Milby Dow enters (unnamed) class 925 displacement boat.

Following the speed boat races there will be a bailing and tilting contest between canoeists, which gives promise of a rare display of skill as well as furnishing much excitement and fun for the delegates.

There will also be a review of nations, under the supervision of Commodore Earle Manint, president of the Houston Kodak Canoe Club. This review will undertake to represent the various nations who have sent delegates to the advertising conventions.

The canoes will pass in review before the judges' stand, each occupied by a gondolier and his swain, attired in costumes of the nations represented. In addition to flying the flags of nations all of the canoes will be appropriately decorated for the occasion.

According to Commodore Manint, this review will present an imposing as well as impressive spectacle, and promises to be one of the real features of the Monday evening entertainment.

There will be suitable prizes awarded, donated by some of the leading business men of the city, and these will go to the best and most artistically decorated canoes.

The participants in this review have been selected from among the membership of the Houston Kodak Canoe Club and their ladies, names to be announced through the daily newspapers.

During the course of a shore dinner which will be served to all the convention delegates by Jack Saunders, owner of the San Jacinto Inn, John H. Paine of the convention entertainment committee, sub-chairman for the dinner, the "Texas Star," a pageant by Miss Jessie Millsaps, will be given by the Houston Public Schools, in co-operation with the City Recreation Department.

The presentation of the pageant comes as the result of a request to these organizations by the entertainment committee of the World Advertising Convention. With plans calling for more than 1,000 in the cast, it was necessary to enlist large organizations, in order to present the pageant on the scale desired.

The pageant to be presented was selected after a competition in which a number of the most experienced pageant writers of Texas took part. Miss Jessie Millsaps, whose pageant was chosen, was born and reared in Houston. She has had a wide experience in pageantry and public presentations. She is a graduate of the Boston School of Expression and has taken post-graduate work in the same school. She is also a graduate of Columbia University of New York City, in which institution she also studied pageantry.

Miss Millsaps has written and staged twenty pageants; she was one of the founders of the Rocky Mountain Artists Colony at Estes Park, Colorado.

The "Texas Star" portrays the history of Texas from the time of the Tejes Indian up to the present, striving to put the great spirit of Texas in each scene.

The Park at the battleground offers an excellent setting for such a pageant, with its long open space, forming a natural amphitheatre.

In the late evening there will be a display of fireworks, A. D. Collins, sub-chairman in charge. Photographs of President Lou E. Holland and other notables will illuminate the sky. This demonstration will be augmented by a display of fireworks from the air, Captain Mackie and his aides assisting.

A chorus of negro voices will probably be used during the shore dinner, to assist in bringing out some of the scenes of the historical pageant.

There will be dancing and other forms of diversion for the delegates before their return to the city that night.

Ad Organ Now Issued Weekly

The official publication of the Advertising Club of St. Louis is now being issued as a weekly, and is known as the Advertising Club Weekly, superseding P-E-P, as the monthly publication issued by the Club for more than ten years was known. Harold M. Mann is editor-manager of the paper.

Women Denied Membership

Efforts to admit women to membership of the Des Moines (Ia.) Advertising Club were defeated last week, the membership deciding that the action several months ago, in tabling a similar resolution, ended the proposition.

MAYOR HOLCOMBE EXTENDS SOUTHLAND'S FAMOUS HOSPITALITY

HOUSTON is anxious to show you just what a thriving, prosperous city she is and will do everything within her power to make your 21st annual Convention the best you have ever held.

She appreciates the honor of entertaining you and trusts that your visit will better acquaint you with activities in the Southwest.

Her ambition is to boast of a population of 500,000 by 1930. She will have to maintain her present growth in order to accomplish that goal. But with her railroads, her ship channel, her many industries and her live and wide-awake citizenry as aides she hopes to accomplish this.

She has planned many unusual and entertaining things for you during your visit and trusts that they will meet with your approval and furnish you enjoyment.

Oscar F. Holcombe

Under Southern skies, with soft breezes blowing off the Gulf of Mexico, Houston, the city where 17 railroads meet the sea, stands with open arms and joyful hearts to greet you when you come, and wants to call you friends forever when you depart. God speed and protect you on your way to our gates, and when you enter may you know that you have arrived at the headquarters of the Southland's famous hospitality.

OSCAR F. HOLCOMBE, Mayor

TEXAS CITIES DECKED FOR A.A.C.W. TOURS

Delegates Invited by Rio Grande Valley, San Antonio and Austin, Port Cities and Oil Regions

Four post-convention "circle tours" have been announced for A. A. C. W. delegates along the Rio Grande Valley into Mexico; down to the Mexican border at Laredo; through east Texas to New Orleans; and to the oil fields and Dallas and Ft. Worth. Each will be of three days duration, starting after the close of the Houston convention. It is the present plan for the parties to leave on Thursday night, May 14.

Tour "A" covers the Rio Grande valley. Visits will be made to Corpus Christi and Kingsville. One of the largest cattle ranches in the world will be visited on the way through the Delta country of the lower Rio Grande valley. The trip will terminate at Brownsville and Matamoros, Mexico, across the Rio Grande.

Tour "B" takes in San Antonio, Laredo, a trip across the border to Mexico, Austin, etc. At Austin there will be a reception by Gov. Ferguson, while an official Mexican dinner and other entertainment is planned for San Antonio.

Tour "C" is through east Texas to New Orleans. The oil refineries, rice and lumber mills, etc., of Beaumont and Port Arthur will be visited. A stop is scheduled for Lake Charles, La. A day will be spent sight-seeing in New Orleans.

Those selecting tour "D" will visit the world oil production centers. The trip will include Mexia, Wortham and Corsicana, as well as a day's entertainment in Fort Worth and another day in Dallas.

A special railroad rate for these trips of one fare for the round trip, plus $2 has been arranged. In most cases, cost of Pullman is the only additional expense.

All trips will return to Houston in time for visitors to make the return trip before the expiration of the time limit for the regular fare-and-a-half for the round trip to the convention. Delegates taking the east Texas and New Orleans trip will have no additional railroad fare if routed via New Orleans from points east of the Mississippi river.

WRITER GETS DIPLOMATIC POST

Charles C. Hart, Washington Correspondent, Named Minister to Albania

Charles C. Hart, Washington correspondent for the Portland Oregonian and other Western newspapers, has been designated as U. S. Minister to Albania.

Mr. Hart is a native of Indiana, 47 years old, and was active in newspaper work in the Middle West and Far West before coming to Washington a number of years ago. He was secretary and manager of the National Republican Progressive League seeking the election of Charles E. Hughes in 1916.

Among the newspapers he is correspondent for are the Minneapolis Tribune, Spokane Spokesman-Review, and Boise Capital News.

As a writer of Washington news for the Minneapolis Tribune he came in frequent contact with Frank Kellogg when he was United States Senator from Minnesota. A warm friendship developed between the two. As Minister to Albania Hart will continue his close relations with Mr. Kellogg, now Secretary of State.

Kirkpatrick Joins California Paper

Lewis A. Kirkpatrick has been made business manager of the Santa Ana (Cal.) Bulletin, owned by Charles D. Overshiner and M. A. Yarnell. John F. Adams, who has represented Mr. Overshiner's interests in the paper, has resigned and in the future Mr. Overshiner will edit the Bulletin. With the addition of Mr. Kirkpatrick to the staff, the Bulletin will resume the operation of its printing plant.

Building in a city that is Building

Under Construction—New 22-story Office Building for Post-Dispatch

HOUSTON, according to the last census, has the highest percentage of income tax returns per capita of any city in the United States. In addition, it has the highest percentage of incomes above $2,500 per year of any city in the United States.

Houston is a city of progress—a city of prosperity. It is a city whose people have the faith and energy to put their dreams into reality. It is a city that matched dollars with the government—millions of dollars—to build a port that daily sees ships from all the countries of the world.

Its railroad facilities spread out in gigantic network, covering the prolific inland areas of Texas and the mid-continent.

Houston is a city that builds.

The Post-Dispatch, serving this territory in an intensified manner, with the greatest home-delivered city circulation of any newspaper in Texas, is building too. It has just moved into one of the finest newspaper plants in the country. It has under construction a 22-story downtown office building, one of the five largest newspaper buildings in the United States.

The Post-Dispatch is keenly alive to the problems of Houston. It is recognized as the leader in civic and industrial progress here.

Advertising space in the Houston Post-Dispatch gets more attention in Houston.

HOUSTON'S CIVIC GREATNESS NEEDS NO PROOF ITS BUSINESS LEADERS TELL A. A. C. W.

MOST any American city with any degree of pride and ambition—and it would be difficult to find one these days of progress and co-operative effort which does not possess these attributes—lays claims to its enviable position as a trade center. In most cases their claims are well-founded but effectiveness to a large degree is lost in the presentation of their claims because of a tendency to deal too much in generalities applicable to most any thriving community.

Houston has certain specific advantages as a trade center, with particular reference to the distributing and marketing phases of the subject, which can be described without the necessity of employing smooth phrases of much verbosity but little information. This character of civic advertising gives credit to the intelligence of prospective readers who it is assumed are looking for information and not for literary entertainment.

There are many elements entering into the trade of an interior territory and the business it develops through its center of distribution. In the first place its resources, to insure a permanent increase of business volume, must be different from that of sections in contiguous territory; it must produce a surplus of something which the other sections need. For the same reason this section in question plays the role of buyer at times and purchases needful products from the other sections.

To promote facilities for this exchange of trade and in order that a high degree of efficiency may exist, there must be adequate means of transportation to bring together with quickness and dispatch the various resources of neighboring sections. There must also be confidence and adequate financial accommodations available to inspire business promotion.

All of these factors are necessary and essential to a volume of foreign as well as domestic trade. Houston has these specific advantages for trade development and because of them and a proper utilization of them by a character of business men who are unselfishly interested in the city's progress as well as in the growth of their own private businesses, Houston is showing a surprising increase in its trade volume year by year.

Houston has unusually complete transportation facilities for the expeditious movement of trade. The city is served by 17 rail lines which reach not only every nook and corner of her logical trade territory but radiate to every section of the vast empire of Texas. Houston rail lines by direct haul serve a little more than 60 per cent of all railway stations in the State.

Many of the merchandise lines distributed throughout Texas and other States of the Southwest are received by Houston wholesalers via the Houston Ship Channel. These water transportation facilities constitute a distinct and highly profitable advantage to the Houston merchant, as they cut his transportation costs enabling him to share with his customers the benefits he thus receives. Houston's water-compelled rates place the city on a parity with all ports of the Gulf and contribute a specific and practical advantage compared to inland centers of distribution.

Houston's banking facilities are adequate and of that character which promotes trade. The city's banks are progressive commercially and alert to civic movements. They have always taken part in all activities which had to do with the city's development.

A folder prepared by the Chamber of Commerce shows that the area of Houston's immediate trade territory represents 24.5 per cent of the total area of the State, or 46,169 square miles. The population of this territory is 1,383,623. The annual purchasing power is $2,766,154,000. There has been an increase of 23 per cent in the population of the territory since 1910 as compared to an increase of 14.9 per cent for the State as a whole. The urban population of the territory is 508,059 and the rural is 875,564.

Not many years ago a few blocks of one, two and three story buildings marked the retail section of Houston. From these modest proportions Houston's retail district has developed until today this area is represented by magnificent stores housed in huge buildings covering a territory that has extended far in every direction from the confines of the original section. Then, this section was restricted to one street, which was quite typical of Southern cities at that time. Today there are a score of business streets in the retail section.

A six-cylinder steel "pony" now overtakes the cantering long-horn on Texas soil. Miss Fox Hastings, champion woman rider and "bull-dogger," star of the Houston rodeo, shown with a critter downed.

Two features of Houston's population particularly commend themselves; one, its unusual growth in later years, and the other, the marked numerical superiority of truly American stock. In these days when the influence of foreign elements is becoming so markedly manifest, a community with a preponderence of American ideals, free from the blight of foreign radicalism, must commend itself to the American investor and advertiser.

Houston has marked recreational, educational, cultural and home life advantages. Nature provides the foundation for the best recreation and Nature has endowed Houston and its vicinity with an abundance of recreational possibilities. The mild climate of Houston makes outdoor play possible the year round.

Any American of good judgment will be influenced, and materially so, in his choice for a home city, by the educational advantages offered his children. Houston caters to that sort of critical consideration of its scholastic possibilities. With free tuition from kindergarten to college, with physical equipment of the most modern type, Houston supplies all the necessary educational requirements. A citizen of Houston can keep his children under his own roof and by his own fireside, with all home influences, and give them a complete primary, grade, high school, and college education, without cost for tuition.

The cultural side of Houston has not been neglected. In Rice Institute Houston has one of the largest privately endowed colleges in the country. The original endowment of William Marsh Rice has grown to approximately $14,000,000. In addition to other assemblies of a public nature this school annually presents a series of lectures by outstanding men in the world of art, letters and science, to which the citizens of Houston are invited. The city has just completed a magnificent Art Institute which contains the best work of local and nationally known artists. From time to time special collections of famous canvases are presented to the public free of cost. One of the finest public libraries in the South is nearing completion, the entire cost of which was contributed by public funds.

Home ownership is a vital factor in the determination of the trade conditions of a city. Where attractive well-kept homes—whether they be of an imposing or modest character—and a universal spirit of home ownership exists, there will one find a class of citizenship, that is permanent and loyal to home institutions and responsive to an appeal which has to do with the betterment of living conditions. These conditions exist in Houston to an unusual degree. During the last five years this city has experienced a remarkable wave—not a boom—of home construction. Seventy-five per cent of this new construction has been necessary to satisfy the demands of desiring homeowners, and the demand has not yet been met.

A big surprise awaits many of the effete advertising men from the East when they visit Houston in May on the occasion of the international convention of the Advertising Clubs of the World. Houston hopes that the inspection will be most rigid and complete.

TRACEY WRITING FOR PRESS

Former Houston Chronicle Editor Now with Scripps-Howard Paper

Editorial articles by M. E. Tracy, for 11 years connected with the Houston (Tex.) Chronicle, 6 of them as its editor, are now being featured by the Houston Press, a Scripps-Howard newspaper.

Tracy is one of the most widely known writers in the southwest. A native of Maine, he had his first newspaper experience in Boston, on the Cambridge Chronicle and the Boston Journal.

With journalism he mixed contracting and architecture at times during his early career.

An interesting sidelight on Tracy's success in both business and newspaper life is the fact that for eight months after birth he was blind. An operation then partially restored his eyesight.

He is forced, however, to wear glasses so strong that in bright sunshine he can use them to light his pipe.

Weekly Spans 75 Years

The Palmer (Mass.) Journal, with its issue of March 27, completed the 75th year of its continuous existence as a weekly newspaper. The first issue of the paper appeared on April 6, 1850.

CLOSE personal relationship with the Jobbers, Manufacturers and Merchants of Texas, places this agency in an enviable position in the matter of placing an advertiser's product so as to get the maximum of distribution. "TOWERED DALLAS" LOOKS FORWARD TO BUSINESS CONQUESTS OF 1950

By CHARLES SAVILLE

FEW sections are making a greater rate of progress than the Southwest and fewer cities are recording a more rapid growth than Dallas. Since the war its building permits have totaled around $120,000,000, and on a per capita basis it has done more construction than any American city save Los Angeles. Although incorporated as a city only some fifty-odd years ago, nearly 250,000 people now boast they live in Greater Dallas. The ambitious namesake of the Vice-President of the United States under the Polk administration, George Mifflin Dallas, has vaulted in population rank in the nation from 86th in 1900 to 39th in 1924.

Dallas has been called a "City of Towers," as it has 115 buildings from 5 to 29 stories in height. Dallas is the home of the Federal Reserve Bank of the 11th District and the financial capital of the Southwest. The clearings of its fifteen banks, well in excess of $2,000,000,000.00 in 1924, gave the city rank of 19th in the Nation. Dallas is the largest inland cotton market in the Nation, financing around 1,500,000 bales annually. More Northern and Eastern concerns maintain branches in Dallas than in any other Texas city.

Dallas is the nation's fifteenth largest jobbing center, with a total business but little below $800,000,000 in 1924. It has more than 500 wholesale concerns carrying stock here and traveling some 3,500 men over the Southwest. Dallas ranks as the fifth largest wholesale dry goods market in the Nation.

In manufacturing Dallas leads all Texas cities, having some 760 industries with an annual output valued at $135,000,000. Dallas leads the world in the manufacture of cotton gins and saddlery, harness and leather gods and ranks among the leading centers of manufacture of cotton seed products.

The fact that 2,000,000 people live within a 100-mile radius of Dallas has a strong bearing on the fact that the annual retail business of the city reaches the high total of $250,000,000. The city has some 3,500 retail establishments.

Dallas has 22 steam or electric railway outlets. Its steam lines operate 163 package cars, giving the city a strong advantage as a distribution center. The freight, express and parcel post business handled annual over both steam and electric lines is in excess of 8,500,000,000 pounds. Dallas has a $6,500,000 union terminal station and a $1,000,000 interurban terminal station.

Dallas is near the geographical center of the Southwest, which it serves as a financial center and wholesale market. Nearly 11,000,000 people live within 24 hours' travel by rail. The Southwest produces annually about $5,000,000,000 worth of new wealth, or about $2,500 per family. It does this notwithstanding that but about one-fourth of its available tillable land is in cultivation. One-half of the oil of the nation is produced in fields within over-night travel of Dallas. Dallas is the largest wholesale market in the Southwest for automobiles, dry goods, farm implements, groceries, furniture, sporting goods, electrical goods, hardware paper, office supplies and many other lines.

Dallas is the home of the State Fair of Texas, the nation's largest annual fair, with an average attendance of 1,000,000. Dallas has 3,800 acres in parks and playgrounds. There are 15 golf courses in the city, 36 theatres and a $12,000,000 hotel building program in 1925 that will bring the total hotel valuation of the city to $25,000,000, with accommodations for 17,500 guests. Dallas entertains around 200 conventions annually.

Dallas has never voted down a school bond issue and pays the highest salaries to its public school teachers of any Texas city. It has some 80 private schools, including such well known institutions as Southern Methodist University, Baylor University's departments of Medicine, Pharmacy, Dentistry and Nursing, and the University of Dallas.

Dallas ranks among the first cities of the nation in express business per capita and in number of telephones per capita. The slogan of Dallas is "The City Where Men Are Looking Forward," and the Chamber of Commerce has a "Twenty-five Year Program Committee" constantly planning for the future. Anyone who visits Dallas and views its accomplishments in a brief half-century, and studies the potentialities of the Southwest, must realize that here is building one of the major cities of the Nation.

LAREDO, GATEWAY TO MEXICO, PLANS ROUSING TIME FOR DELEGATES

LAREDO, Texas, lays just claim to be the most important and most commanding gateway for the movement of American and foreign commodities into Mexico. The statistics of the 23rd Customs District which includes the Rio Grande border crossings, show conclusively that the movement of exports through Laredo amounts to more than double the combined movement through all other Rio Grande crossings into Mexico.

This supremacy has been established on account of the shortest railway mileage from large manufacturing centers in the United States to Laredo, and the shortest mileage from Laredo to the great manufacturing centers of Mexico. For that reason also the quickest time is made in delivery of carlots of commodities. The commodity distribution area through the Laredo gateway extends over the entire Republic of Mexico.

There is no representative of manufacturing interests who will be in attendance at the annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs in May who should not visit the Laredo gateway and study its facilities. Laredo is included in the Tour B circuit which is composed of Austin, the capital of the state, San Antonio and Laredo.

Laredo as a city has been completely modernized with a complete rebuilding, as it were, of the business center. Twelve miles of the most permanent modern type of paving have just been completed. The telephone, telegraph and electric lines are all under ground.

In addition the continuous season of growth of shrubs, fruit trees and shade trees has established the reputation of Laredo as one of the most beautiful cities in the south. The system and standard of the public schools and general education are equal to any facilities offered in any city in the south.

Laredo is famous for its hospitality and entertainment. The splendid new hotel, together with casinos and pavilions in Nuevo Laredo, Mexico, make it posible for the people of the two Laredos to afford diversion and entertainment which is not surpassed by any city on the border, and certainly not in south Texas.

As an example of the ability of Laredo to entertain, what is known as the Noche Mexicana, or a night in Mexico, will be staged on a grand scale the night that the A.A.C.W. delegations spend in Laredo. This will be a character of entertainment featuring the national songs and dances and other features of entertainment offered in Mexico, which will not be available to the delegates at any other city on any of the circle tours.

At Laredo there is the most complete organization of custom brokers, and other facilities for the movement of imports and exports. No city in the south is equal to the ability of Laredo in the movement of traffic into Mexico. The banking and financial resources of the city are ample for any volume of commercial transactions. The wholesale and jobbing business is being greatly encouraged and is rapidly increasing at this gateway.

With reference to the products of the irrigation farms of the Laredo territory, the famous Bermuda onion of Texas is produced to the extent of 1,500 cars from the Laredo area. These famous onions will be moving in train lots from Laredo at the time that the "ad" club delegation will be guests of the city. More than 1,000 cars of the health giving spinnach is moved from Laredo each winter and spring. The vigor and vitality of thousands of American citizens has doubtless been reinforced by the liberal supply of spinnach from the border territory.

ANCIENT SAN ANTONIO, FOUNDED 1690, EXPECTS GREAT THINGS BEFORE 1930

By FRED M. HERNDON

IT is a far cry from the little Indian settlement along the banks of the San Antonio River in 1690, to the modern industrial city of San Antonio of 1925, with its 225,000 inhabitants, (300,000 in the country,) yet the modern, hustling giant among Southern cities still retains much of that historic and romantic background which has become a heritage. Here is located the Alamo, sacred shrine of Texas' independence, and the missions, monuments to the first civilization in the great Southwest.

San Antonio, second oldest city in the United States; largest city in the largest State in the Union, the gateway of trade and commerce with Mexico, Central and South America and the West Indies, boasts of a population which is 92 per cent native whites; 49 public and 37 private schools with an enrollment of more than 41,000 pupils; 77 churches; two Y. M. C. A. buildings; one Y. M. C. A.; more actual home owners than perhaps any other large city in America, average value $6,500; special attention given to landscaping makes residential districts never-to-be-forgotten beauty spots.

The City covers an area of 36 square miles through which winds the San Antonio River and San Pedro Springs Creek spanned by 86 modern bridges within the city limits. San Antonio is 700 feet above sea level, has 15 main highways leading into and out of the city. 179 miles of paved streets; 46 parks and plazas with a combined acreage of more than 600 acres; one municipal golf course, three country club courses; six polo fields; eight base ball fields; 16 municipal tennis courts; four municipal bathing pools; municipal tourist camp; pistol, target and scatter-gun ranges within the city limits; all operated by the city free of cost.

San Antonio is served by seven railways, four of which are trunk lines: Missouri-Kansas-Texas; Missouri-Pacific-I.-G. N.; Southern Pacific; San Antonio & Aransas Pass; San Antonio, Uvalde & Gulf; San Antonio Southern, and Fredericksburg & Northern; with two other lines projected for the immediate future.

The Alamo, sacred shrine of Texas independence, treasured by San Antonio, the second oldest city in the United States. This has been called the finest old Spanish relic on American soil

Upon the completion in 1926 of the new deep water port at Corpus Christi, 150 miles from San Antonio, manufacturers and jobbers of the Alamo City will secure advantage of lower commodity rates. San Antonio is now many miles nearer the markets of Mexico, Central and South America than any competing city, and is the logical distributing point for this export business.

San Antonio's trade territory embraces 160 counties with a population estimated at 2,000,000 persons. San Antonio is 700 miles from El Paso, 300 miles from Dallas and Fort Worth, and 211 miles from Houston.

San Antonio, with a $4,500,000 bond issue for public improvements to be spent this year and in 1926, has the lowest per capita cost of government of any city in Texas; San Antonio, $29.63; Fort Worth $39.98; Dallas, $49.26; Waco, $41.14.

An average of 10 homes each day are being built in San Antonio at an average cost of more than $3,000, a total for the year of $1,500,000. The building program for 1925 also includes: new hotels, $2,350,000; additions to present hotels (contracts let) $1,500,000; apartments $75,000; office buildings, $3,000,000; industrial plants, $500,000; Municipal, five fire stations, $150,000, municipal auditorium $800,000; addition to county court house, $1,000,000; street widening and paving, $700,000; flood prevention program, $2,800,000, or a grand total of $14,375,000.

San Antonio has not for a long while faced an unemployment situation and future building plans preclude such a calamity in this section, as all of San Antonio's trade territory is growing at a rate never equalled by any other section of the Nation.

With realty transfers for 1924 at $23,336,037, tax assessments at $188,202,180, post office receipts at $1,051,305; with 27 National, State and private banks with deposits of $65,000,000 and 1924 clearings of $425,014,969; abundant pure artesian water for all purposes; adequate supply of natural gas for domestic and industrial purposes, and low rates for electricity for lighting and power; with a rapidly developing contiguous territory; with its historical and romantic background, San Antonio is to witness its greatest development within the coming three years.

The Houston Post-Dispatch will broadcast speeches delivered at the general convention sessions of the Associated Advertising Clubs at Houston.

WELCOME

The City of Houston extends a hearty welcome to the Diplomats of Business who next month will gather here from all over the world.

It is given to us to be hosts to the most impressive gathering of men ever assembled within the boundaries of Houston, or indeed, Texas. In May, those unfamiliar with Houston will feel the pulse of a growing city, alive to innovations and eager for progress. They will find an industrial and commercial development that ranks Houston as the future metropolis of the great Southwest.

But, already, Houston has been extensively advertised and comprehensively boosted. Numberless adjectives have been used to describe the benefits of Houston, her people, her climate, her gardens, her business growth, her waterway development and her rail facilities. Our work (and pleasure) now lies in proving to our distinguished guests that Advertising is Truthful.

PARIS, RISING ANEW FROM 1916 FIRE RUINS, A SEAT OF TRADE AND CULTURE

By W. C. Temple, Jr.

PARIS as a marketing place for nationally advertised products has no superior among the many modern Texas cities. There are approximately 23,000 people in Paris proper, and the population of Lamar County, of which Paris is the county seat, is more than 60,000. The trade territory of Paris will cover a district of nearly half a million population, taking in most of Northeast Texas and part of Southern Oklahoma.

The residents of Paris keep an active interest at all times in the advancement of the education of the younger ones and the older people arrange for many distinctive entertainments and lectures during the year. The city has ten grade schols, two high schools, a junior college and a business college, with buildings of the very latest and most modern design.

The churches of Paris are a point of especial pride. The buildings are practically all new, since the city was the scene of a great fire in 1916 that burned 1,440 buildings or more than half of the city. These churches have been erected at a cost of more than a million dollars and all enjoy good attendance. The religious survey of Paris showed it to be one of the highest ranking cities in that line in the world. Nearly 50 per cent of the residents of Paris are affiliated with one of the 27 churches, all in well-appointed buildings.

Five banks operate in Paris, including three national and two state institutions. There is also a building and loan association and a trust company with large capitalization. Deposits in Paris banks will average $16,000,000.

The housing of Paris people has been taken care of by a strict building code that has resulted in the lowest fire insurance rate allowable by the state fire insurance commission. There are less than ten apartment houses in the city, Paris being an own-your-own-home city. Since most of the homes are owned by the occupants Paris has gained the enviable reputation as the cleanest and most beautiful city in Texas.

The industrial development of Paris is in its infancy but is showing increased activity consistently. There are 52 manufacturing enterprises here including a furniture factory, crate factory, iron foundry, handle factory, printing, overall factory, flour, cottonseed products, candy and petroleum products.

There are 24 jobbers and distributors of various lines in Paris. Many of these have very large businesses.

The retail stores are quick to adopt modern methods of selling and have attracted many words of praise from the travelling public. The retail district is built around a very attractive plaza, or square. All street cars converge here and bus lines to the outlying districts of Paris have their terminus on the plaza. The stores surround the plaza and extend about three blocks in each direction from it.

Hard-surfaced highways radiate in all directions from Paris, adding many thousand customers to the retail trade. There are retailers for practically everything in Paris and the Paris Chamber of Commerce has just completed a "buy it at home" campaign that has taught the people that they may buy anything within reason at home.

Four theaters, including one legitimate and three motion picture houses, and three auditoriums with a total seating capacity of 2,500, afford entertainment facilities.

Some of the special features of Paris include a new post office just completed at the cost of $200,000; a municipal water plant with five-billion gallon capacity; the first municipally-owned abattoir in the world; biggest compress in Northeast Texas; three cotton gins; largest wagon cotton market in the world marketing average of 65,000 bales annually; three hospitals, 42½ miles of concrete highway, 11½ miles of concrete slab, and 59 miles of gravel highway; attractive public buildings of all kinds.

The nationally advertised product is furnished with an ample market here in Paris. It will be known and recognized by the buyers.

In Texas buy local circulation in the leading cities. Concentrate. Get city coverage. Much of the country circulation of some Texas papers is farther from the city of publication than St. Louis is from Chicago or Cleveland is from New York.

Dallas has four daily newspapers with a combined city circulation of approximately 106,000. The Dallas Gas Company estimates that there are 44,600 families in Dallas. 2.3 papers per family. To get thorough city coverage with minimum of duplication, select papers which, on account of editorial style and policy, are least likely to duplicate.

The Dallas Dispatch is a newspaper with a vigorous editorial policy, expounding the liberal viewpoint on public questions. Editorial make-up, style and policy are distinctive and exclusive. It has never enjoyed greater home carrier circulation than now.

The Dallas Dispatch reaches in excess of 28,819 families, which for the most part, read The Dallas Dispatch EXCLUSIVELY. The Dallas Dispatch differs from other Dallas papers as much as the New York Evening Post differs from the New York Evening Journal—as much as the New York Times differs from the New York American—as much as the Chicago Daily News differs from the Chicago American.

No other Dallas paper can give you contact with these 28,819 Dallas Dispatch families. This large and important buying group is the "exclusive property" of The Dallas Dispatch.

Port Arthur, Texas

Wonder City of the Southwest—a world port—world's greatest oil refinery Center

The Industrial Port of America and Pan-American Gateway

WELCOME!

Important as the Houston convention itself will be the sidetrip to Port Arthur, Texas. Here you will find the second largest import port and the fifth largest export port on the Atlantic and Gulf Coast. Here you will find the largest oil refineries in the world and one of the largest oil canning plants, also the world's largest asphalt plant. Because of the importance of Port Arthur, the convention is offering this as one of the sidetrips of the convention.

Those of you who accompany the special tour of these plants will go away with the impression of wonder and vastness at an industry and equipment that is superior to anything else in the world. You will also see a beautiful city that has grown remarkably and substantially without any boom, but as the logical result of the impetus of tremendous business, shipping, refining, etc., that has been developed here due to Port Arthur's advantageous location. You will also see in Port Arthur a modern newspaper plant and, in The Port Arthur News, a newspaper that would do credit to a much larger city.

The ownership of the Port Arthur News had not only visioned the past growth and possibilities of Port Arthur, but have visioned its future growth as well. We are giving this community a metropolitan newspaper in every sense, so much so that Port Arthur is a unit in itself, and must be considered so by national advertisers, both those who are, and those who should be, cultivating this immensely wealthy and responsive community.

Mexican water wagon, reminder of a fast fading picture of Southern Texas life

PALESTINE, RAIL CENTRE, ALSO NOTED FOR ENTERPRISING COTTON FARMERS

By M. F. WARD

PALESTINE, the county seat of Anderson County, situated in East Texas on the International-Great Northern and Southern Pacific railroads, has a population of 13,000, most of whom are native born with about 20 per cent colored. The population of the territory served by Palestine business concerns is about 35,000.

Due to the location of railroad shops and general offices, Palestine has a considerable number of railroad employes. Aside from this support, the city is maintained largely through agricultural pursuits in the county.

Outstanding facts in regard to Palestine are summarized as follows:

Banks: National 3, State 1, Private 1. Total resources over $5,000,000.

Wholesale Houses: Groceries 5, Meats 1, Fruits 1, Hardware 2.

Churches: Baptist 2; Christian 1; Christian Science, Jewish, Roman Catholic, Lutheran, Methodist, 2; Disciples of Christ, Episcopal, Presbyterian, 2; Y. M. C. A. Colored people also have several churches, notably Baptist, Methodist, Christian, and Church of God.

Theatres: Motion picture, 3; opera house, 1.

Schools: Public elementary 8, high 2, junior high 1, parochial 1, business college 1.

Principal Industries: Railroad shops and general offices, agriculture, poultry, stock raising, dairying, foundry, furniture manufacturing, two ice plants, gas plant, electric light and power plant, cotton oil mill and manufacturing of fertilizer, broom factory, mattress factory, candy factory, salt and lignite mining, printing and newspaper publishing, wholesale and retailing goods to railroad and agricultural section.

Miscellaneous Information: Road building program in progress involving expenditure of $2,300,000 for improved highways in Anderson County, $750,000 recently expended on paved street, adequate supply of water with municipally owned plant, fertile farm lands producing cotton, corn, grains, fruits, vegetables, in variety; iron ore in abundance, pine and hardwood timber, salt and lignite, many natural lakes and everrunning streams of clear water, hunting and fishing, modern country club with golf courses, municipal golf course, gun club, U. S. Weather Bureau.

Clubs and Fraternal Organizations: Rotary, Lions, Chamber of Commerce, Shrine Club, Knights of Columbus, Masons, Woodmen, Knights of Pythias, Odd Fellows, Woodmen Circle, Maccabees, Eastern Star, Knights Templar and Elks.

Palestine Trading Area: Extends throughout the county. Intermittent business is secured from towns on edge of adjoining counties within 30 to 50 miles radius. This trade is both by train and dirt roads kept in passable condition as an inducement to motorists.

Number of Retail Outlets for Nationally Advertised Products: Passenger automobile agencies, 8; automobile accessories, 15; automobile tire agencies, 15; bakers, 2; cigar stores and stands (including hotels), 12; confectioners (including hotel stands), 6; delicatessen, 1; druggists, 9; dry goods, 12; department stores, 5; electrical supplies, 2; florists, 3; fruits, 4; furniture, 4; garages (public), 8; grocers, 70; hardware, 4; jewelry, 2; meat markets, 70; men's furnishings, 15; men's clothing, 15; merchant tailors, 6; milliners, 9; opticians, 2; photographers, 2; pianos (and miscellaneous musical instruments), 2; restaurants (including hotels), 6; sporting goods, 5; stationers, 3; women's apparel, 12.

The Case of CORPUS CHRISTI, TEXAS

Shorn of all verbiage, here are the facts about the wonder city of the Gulf Coast.

1. Government, city, state and navigation district now spending $4,320,000.00 on DEEP WATER PORT at this city. Port to be completed in 1926. Channel twenty-five feet deep, two hundred feet wide, bottom depth. Turning basin fully protected and equipped with most up to date docks and warehouses.

2. Natural gas, from an unlimited supply, controlled by the city and delivered to industrial plants as low as six cents per thousand. This gas measures 917 b. t. u.'s and has a rock pressure of 600 pounds.

3. Competent labor exists here in abundance at from seventy-five cents to one dollar for females and one dollar and a half for males. Economical living conditions for labor, with unusual opportunities to become home owners.

4. Splendid inducements in factory sites forty feet above high tide adjacent to four railways and docks for deep water harbor.

5. The climate is equable and work can be carried on for twelve months in the year without expensive building requirements. The mean winter temperature is fifty-six.

6. Ample banking facilities. Corpus Christi has four banks with resources over $8,000,000.00.

7. Corpus Christi has large deposits of sand, which careful analysis and actual test show to be suitable for making glass.

8. Corpus Christi has large deposits of clay, which actual tests have shown is admirably adapted to the making of high grade brick and vitrified products generally.

9. The present liberal policy of the Mexican Government in the matter of exporting raw materials puts Corpus Christi with her cheap fuel in closer proximity to great deposits of iron and zinc ore than exists anywhere else in the United States between cheap fuel and raw material.

10. Corpus Christi is a large concentration point for the highest grade uniform hard staple cotton in the entire cotton belt. The atmosphere contains the degree of moisture desirable for making cotton fabrics. A nationally known manufacturer who employs 20,000 men recently said, "I am strongly of the opinion that . . . Corpus Christi, Texas, if properly developed, would exceed all other cotton manufacturing centers in the world."

11. Corpus Christi is surrounded by nearly 2,000,000 acres of the richest black land in the cotton belt. Nueces County over the past ten years has averaged five-eighths of a bale of cotton to the acre. Diversified farming is practiced. Various grain sorghums, hay crops and vegetables supplement cotton in making our farmer prosperous.

12. Corpus Christi is a great summer and winter resort. Its beaches are unexcelled anywhere. With good salt water bathing and fishing as recreations, labor is happy and contented. No serious labor trouble has ever been experienced in this city.

Genuine Co-operation will be given by Corpus Christi business people to any Manufacturer seeking an Economic Location in this Favored Environ.

YOU CANNOT FAIL TO ENJOY IT

AMARILLO IS THE "PAN" OF TEXAS' FAMOUS "PANHANDLE"

By O. V. VERNON

YOU'VE heard of the Panhandle.

Everybody has, even the Canadian, the Alaskan, and perhaps the Turk.

The "ruralest" school in distant Maine has a geography with the Panhandle in it; Texas' shape makes her stand out from all other States.

They've heard of the Panhandle, but what of the pan?

Well, there is a pan—one city. Figuratively, if not geographically, Amarillo, is the "pan" of the expression. Around that municipality of cowmen, "great open spaces" and snappy weather is some of the richest country in the world. There, if anywhere, is the virgin land of the Southwest. "Go to the Panhandle, young man, and grow up with the country," Horace Greeley might say today.

Amarillo in 1900 was a cowtown, boasting 1442 inhabitants. Today it has 25,000 inhabitants. During the last twenty-four years it has become the center of transportation and distribution for a region as large as the state of Ohio. That region, at present only one-fourth tilled, with development only begun, is today the largest reservoir of proven but undeveloped resources in the nation. Chief among those resources are farm lands, natural gas and oil.

For agriculture. the Panhandle has many square miles of fertile lands, just now coming upon the market because of the breaking up of large ranches. Although the greater portion of its lands is still virgin soil, the Panhandle is the banner wheat and grain sorghums producing section of the State.

Engineers agree that the Panhandle natural gas field is the nation's greatest reservoir of fuel. The twenty-five wells already drilled have a capacity exceeding 1,000,000,000 cubic feet daily. It is calculated the field could easily deliver the equivalent of 900,000 tons of coal daily for fifty years. One smelter already has been located in Amarillo to use this cheap fuel. After two years operation, its capacity was recently doubled.

It is difficult to speak of the Panhandle oil field in terms small enough to be believed, because no field yet discovered offers comparison to size. The proven area is about 80 square miles. Storage tanks and pipe line facilities are now available, and the Panhandle oil is being used by the Amarillo Refining Company.

Amarillo is the center of the network of railroads which overspread the Panhandle. These railways, radiating in seven directions, and no other city within 200 miles in any direction, made Amarillo a natural distributing point. Wholesale houses took advantage of that situation, and so there are 25,000 people in Amarillo in 1925. During the four years following 1920, through steady enlargement of all its activities, 1,084 homes have been built here. Wholesale business in 1924 was approximately $100,000,000. Four hundred traveling men reside here.

As Amarillo has steadily advanced from a standpoint of industry and wealth, civic improvements have laid the foundation for a real city, by providing for practically every community need. Public buildings include Municipal Auditorium, seating 3,000 persons, which has enabled the people of the region to hear grand opera and the foremost musicians of the nation. Other buildings are a city hall, federal building, the only country library building in the state, a county hospital which is the latest word in scientific arrangement and equipment, Masonic Temple, Elks Home, and ample school facilities. There are twenty-five miles of paved streets, four miles of "white-way" street lights, and thirty miles of paved highways in the country.

Amarillo has the city manager form of government and tax supported Chamber of Commerce work. Her sanitary inspection system insures a high order of civic cleanliness. Her schools are among the highest ranking in the state. There are twenty-three churches, representing all leading denominations.

Altogether, Amarillo being a growing city and the center of a rapidly developing region, offers opportunity to the ambitious; its civic improvements stamp it as a public spirited city. Remains then, only healthfulness, agreeable climate and pleasant surroundings to be considered. What about them?

Well, Amarillo's high dry atmosphere is extremely healthful for people, but unhealthful for germs. Her climate is not only agreeable, but interesting. Plenty of sunshine and an altitude of 3663 feet provide for that. There is no deadly monotony of weather here. The winters are crispy, cool, though the thermometer seldom reaches zero. Summer temperatures are moderate. Nights are cool throughout the year, cool enough to make cover comfortable, and mosquitoes are virtually unknown. In all seasons, the temperature has a tonic quality which promotes vigor and healthfulness.

Climate in Amarillo's distinctive asset.

PORT ARTHUR, A NEW CITY OF TEXAS, IS OIL REFINING CENTRE

By C. K. DE BUSK

A FEW years preceding the beginning of the present century, the region in the south eastern corner of Texas and on the shores of Sabine was a vast wasteland; today in the heart of this region is Port Arthur, the world's greatest oil refining center; fifth port of America in volume of commerce;—a city that ranked fifth in total building permits in 1923, a population of almost 45,000 people, modern and progressive in every way and has been called the wonder city of the South West.

In the plant of the Gulf Refining Company it has the largest petroleum refining plant in the world—a giant industry having a capacity of 103,000 barrels a day, and employing 8,000 men.

In the plant of the Texas Company Port Arthur has another refinery that ranks along with a dozen of the largest. The plant of the Pure Oil Company, and the Atlantic Oil & Refining Company brings Port Arthur's daily output of refined petroleum products to 8,000,000 gallons per day.

Port Arthur's growth has been rapid and as a result the city is new. Port Arthur's growth has been phenomenal, yet the better things of life have not been overlooked, and while Port Arthur is a great industrial city, it is morally clean, intellectual, alert and desirable in every way, well balanced and poised and sure of its ground. Port Arthur's greater industrial district has an area of 10 square miles, and in the past four years more than $75,000,000 have been spent in industrial improvements. This district now has 16,500 employees with an annual payroll of $30,000,000, yet it is regarded by those who know Port Arthur as but the beginning of a great industrial center.

Texas and the Southwest Represents 10 Per Cent of Your Sales Possibilities NOW— And Growing Bigger Every Year!

This fact will stay with you after your visit to Texas for A. A. C. of W. Convention.

The Southwest, comprising the states of Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Louisiana and New Mexico, contains 10% of the nation's population. In these five Southwest states there are only 17 cities of 25,000 population and over. These 17 cities contain but 14.7% of the Southwest's population.

Analyzed from the standpoint of sales opportunities, the Southwest is a small city and town, and farm market, because 85.3% of the people live in the smaller cities and towns and on the farms.

All sections of the Southwest are increasing rapidly in population. The agricultural and industrial development is enormous. From these activities there comes an ever-increasing stream of new wealth which means buying power.

CORPUS CHRISTI SEES VISIONS OF GREATNESS AS PORT, RESORT AND FACTORY

By RALPH BRADFORD

TWENTY years ago the town of Corpus Christi dozed quietly in the sun. Unsightly clay bluffs rose behind her to the west. The listless waves of the bay lapped wearily among the waste and wreckage of an unkept beach. No streets were paved, few sidewalks were cemented. It was a tired little town asleep in the land of Mañana.

As you went west out of town, you encountered an unbroken stretch of monotonous prairie land, devoted exclusively to the culture of the long horned cow and the short tailed rattler. Sixteen miles west of town two railroads crossed. The crossing was a place of desolation—a lonely junction in the flat waste of the prairie.

That was twenty years ago.

Today Corpus Christi is a city of nearly 20,000. Its streets are widened and paved. Its streets are beautified. Its hotels are famous. Its buildings are new and modern. The clay bluff has been transformed into a terraced municipal asset.

Go west out of town. The prairie has been converted into great farms. The lonely junction point is a city of 3,000, and is the greatest ginning point in the world. For ten years the black acres of Nueces County have led the world with the highest average yield of cotton produced in the cotton belt.

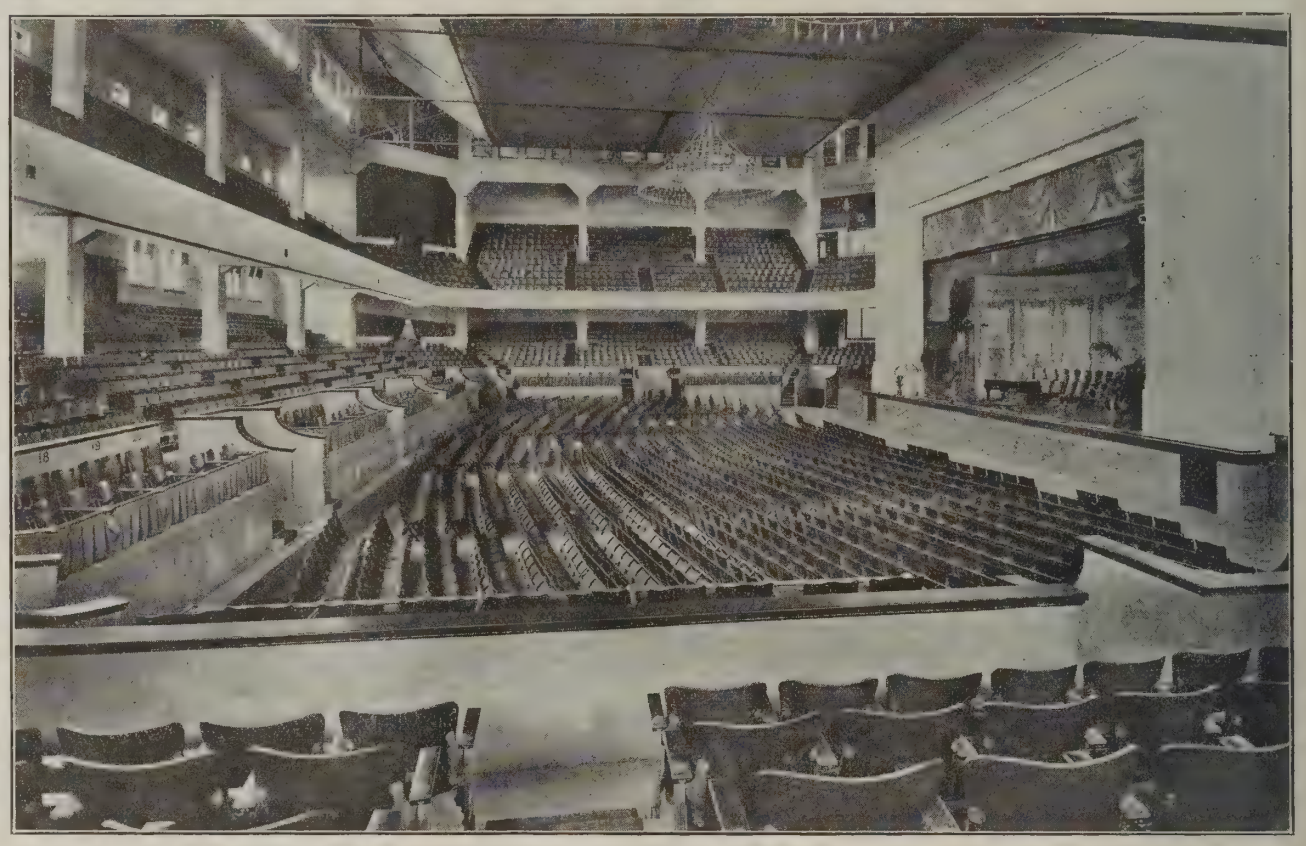
Corpus Christi has a great gas field, whose output is controlled by the city. Gas is furnished to domestic consumers for 60 cents per thousand, and to manufacturers for the unheard-of low figure of 6 cents a thousand.

The greatest deposit of iron ore in the world is only 600 miles away on a direct one-line haul. Zinc ore in unlimited quantities exists within 365 miles of this gas field.

High grade clay suitable for the manufacture of brick, tile, and other vitrified products exists in great quantities at this point. Here also are found enormous quantities of sand suited for the making of glass.

Corpus Christi is ideally situated for the location of textile industries. A nationally-known manufacturer who employs 20,000 men recently said, "I am strongly of the opinion that . . . Corpus Christi, Tex., if properly developed, would exceed all other cotton manufacturing centers in the world.

A cotton mill is being financed at present and others are sure to follow. Corpus Christi is a large concentration point for the highest grade uniform hard staple cotton in the entire cotton belt. The atmosphere contains the degree of moisture desirable for making cotton fabrics. Labor conditions are most satisfactory. Corpus Christi has first called on a great supply of efficient labor that can be had on reasonable terms. Climatic conditions are favorable to a year-round operation of industrial plants without expensive outlay for buildings and heating apparatus.



The rich agricultural background of Corpus Christi serves as a stabilizer for her business progress. The discovery of the gas field insures her industrial advancement. The opening of her deep water port guarantees both her agricultural and her industrial success, and at the same time opens up a great commercial future.

Work on the port development is proceeding rapidly. Three dredge boats are at work on the channel; the foundations for the docks and warehouses are finished; the big bascule bridge is in process of construction; and it is absolutely assured that the whole project will be completed on schedule and that the Port of Corpus Christi will be ready for ocean-going vessels by the fall of 1926.

This port will have a channel 25 feet deep and 200 feet wide, bottom width thus affording accommodations for ocean-going vessels. $4,320,000 is being spent on this project, which is being built because of an economic demand for its existence. It is the closest port in the United States to the Panama Canal and the South American trade. Grain can be shipped here from the Northwest and put on board ship five cents a ton cheaper than it can be loaded on ship at any Atlantic port. Corpus Christi is the logical port of exit and entry for a vast territory.

There is still another important phase of this city's development. Corpus Christi is getting to be one of the great playgrounds of America. It has a semi-tropic climate. It is a place of palms and hibiscus and bougainvillæa. Its beaches are unsurpassed anywhere. Winter and summer tourists thousands are finding in Corpus Christi their ideal of a resort town.

Thousands of visitors flee from inland heat and find relief in our cool breeze and dashing surf. Other thousands find here a winter home. Splendid opportunities exist here for people with capital to invest in cottages, rooming houses and hotels; and for those who desire a new home, away from the rigors of northern winter, the appeal of this southern city is irresistible.

Interior of Houston City auditorium where all sessions of the A. A. C. W. convention will be held. This is said to be the second finest city auditorium in America

CLEBURNE SPENDS MONEY TO MAKE "LIFE WORTH LIVING" FOR CITIZENS

By H. A. OLIVER

CLEBURNE, a city of 20,000, thirty miles from Fort Worth and fifty from Dallas, with train, interurban and good roads connecting all three, has a trade territory of 25 miles on the north and east, and 50 miles on the west and south. Johnson County has a splendid system of roads, affording quick transportation under any weather conditions.

The Santa Fe Railroad runs four ways out of Cleburne; also the Trinity & Brazos Valley R. R. and an interurban on an hourly schedule. Main shops of the G. C. & S. F. R. R. are located in Cleburne, employing 2,000 men with a payroll of $250,000 per month. Also giving employment to many are a foundry, cotton compress, four gins, flour mill, mattress, broom and candy factories, planing mill, creamery, laundries, and smaller manufacturers. Cleburne has a bountiful supply of pure, artesian water. It is famous for its modern churches, fine homes and well-equipped schools, the latter properties representing a larger investment in proportion to the entire community wealth than that of any other city in the world.

Electricity is furnished by the Texas Power & Light Co.; natural gas by the Municipal Gas Company; the water and sewerage plant is municipally owned.

Johnson County has 464,000 acres, 85 per cent of which is under cuyltivation; the county last year produced 50,000 bales of cotton, while this year it raised 52,000 bales. Besides the cotton crop, corn, oats, wheat, fruit and vegetables are raised in abundance, and dairy and poultry products are notable.

Cleburne has three substantial banks, and a group of broad-minded, friendly citizens who are ever ready to co-operate for the betterment of their city.

Wichita Falls is the center of a rich trade territory of a million people with excellent railroad and highway outlets.

MANUFACTURING AND DISTRIBUTING CENTER

An ideal factory location with over a hundred plants already in successful operation.

CHEAP FUEL. UNLIMITED WATER. LOWER FREIGHT RATES.

WICHITA FALLS NEEDS NO OIL BOOM FOR CERTAIN PROSPERITY

THE hectic oil boom days which brought Wichita Falls to the attention of the world are now past and this city of more than 50,000 people is building on a foundation of substantial resources, including agriculture, oil, livestock, manufacturing and superior educational facilities.

The oil industry which is now on a solid and permanent foundation, has helped to make possible the development which has taken place within the past seven years during which time the population has increased from 19,000 to 54,000; building permits from a few thousands to two and one-half million; bank clearings from $31,631,070 to $119,265,645; postal receipts from $123,233 to $226,294.

The mammoth Wichita Valley Irrigation Project which has been built at a cost of $4,500,000 and was completed in 1924 is an asset which makes certain a future of prosperity and progress.

The development of lands under this project during the latter part of 1924 was remarkable with a cotton yield of from one to two bales per acre and successful growth of various truck crops and fruits.

This project includes Lake Kemp which is the seventh largest artificial body of water in the United States and more than one hundred acres of rich river valley land.

The splendid public school system of Wichita Falls includes a Junior College, the million dollar building having been completed last year. The superior educational advantages offered are attracting families from all sections of the country and during 1925 the school attendance has increased at the rate of more than 200 per month.

Wichita Falls is the center of a vast and rich trade territory of nearly a million people—the most prosperous and most rapidly growing section of Texas—a region scarcely touched in the way of agricultural, industrial and commercial development. There are seven railroad outlets into this territory, supplemented by hundreds of miles of paved highways.

Due to the advantages of what is known as the Texas "Common Point" freight rate Wichita Falls has a big advantage over other cities in this section. This city can serve this immediate territory of more than fifty counties more quickly and more economically than any other town.

The vast section known as the South Plains which the Fort Worth & Denver Railroad is entering, will be directly tributary to Wichita Falls with the completion of this road. Wichita Falls jobbers and wholesalers will be able to serve this section a day ahead of any other large city.

Over a hundred manufacturing concerns are prospering here with distribution of products over the states of Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico and in many instances the United States and foreign countries.

The first three months of 1925 have been the most prosperous in the history of the city, the growth which is now taking place being on a stable and firm basis with every prospect for continued development and prosperity.

CORSICANA'S CITIZENS SHOW THEIR SPEED BY LEADING STATES AND CLUB AFFAIRS

THE territory in which Corsicana is located is known the world over as an oil and agricultural center. For years oil and cotton have been the chief products and for years it has led the state in these two great commodities. Both commodities being ready money crops makes this section one of the richest fields to get returns on nationally advertised articles.

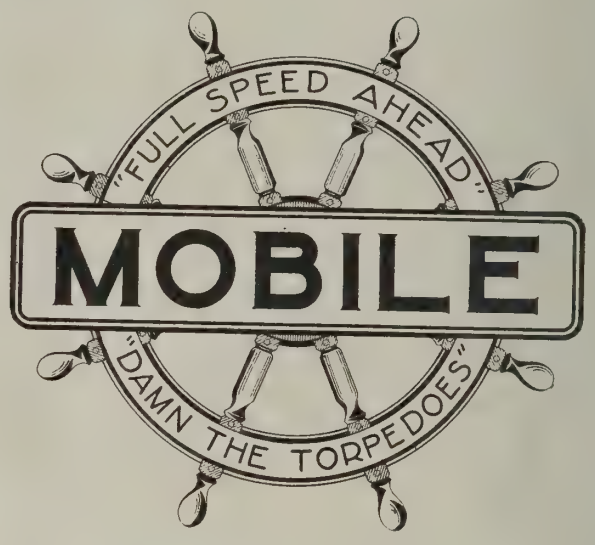
Corsicana has a population of 25,000 and Navarro county a population of 75,000 people. It is the second largest cotton market, sixth in building activities and eighth in building activities in Texas. Located in the heart of the black land belt, and an agricultural and oil center, the county has a tax rendition of $75,000,000. Over 15,000 automobiles are registered in this county.

Large oil fields are located here and their peak daily production reached over 354,000 barrels. The daily production at present is over 100,000 barrels. There is much wildcatting under way at the present and there is no doubt that before many weeks have passed another oil pool will be uncovered that will surpass the great Corsicana-Powell pool.

The city of Corsicana is so situated geographically that it is the hub of a wheel, the spokes of which reach out into a rich territory for fifty miles. It is a railroad and interurban center and enjoys three hundred miles of hard surfaced roads. A bond issue carrying $7,000,000 will be voted soon for the purpose of building many more miles of good roads in the county.

There are many miles of paved streets in Corsicana and a half-million-dollar five-story hotel has just been opened to the public. An eight-story office building and many other buildings of lesser size are in the course of construction or have just been completed. A modern electric traffic signal system controls the traffic in the main business district and electric cars traverse the main part of the residential section.

Corsicana also enjoys a fresh water system unexcelled at any other place in the state with millions of gallons of fresh and pure water impounded in the municipal reservoir available at all times.



Corsicana is one of the industrial centers of the state with one of the largest oil well machinery manufacturing plants in the world located here. A large cotton mill is also located at this city and it is expected that another will be put in operation here soon. Many oil well supply houses also maintain large branch houses here and all of the major oil companies have offices in this city.

Exceptional climatic conditions make Corsicana an ideal city in which to live and from a civic standpoint it is one of the most attractive cities in the state. Corsicana is a wholesome and distributing center with 67 wholesale houses located here including groceries, hardware, candy, produce, coffee, cotton warehouses, cotton seed oil products, refined petroleum products, oil well supplies, bread and cake factories, etc. These wholesale houses handle and feature all of the nationally advertised products.

For a number of years Corsicana has been very much in the limelight due to its activity in the state and national advertising circles, having one of the most wideawake advertising clubs in Texas. It was at Corsicana that the Texas Centennial and World's Exposition idea was born, which exposition will be the next world's fair according to the plans of the Texas Centennial Governing Board of 100 citizens have been elected and appointed with discretionary power to act. The idea of the Centennial Celebration arose at the 14th Annual convention of the Tenth District Associated Advertising Clubs of the World which was held in Corsicana in November 1923.

Corsicana will send a special train of one hundred and fifty delegates to the annual convention in Houston of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, as well as will also entertain Circle Tour D. covering North Texas, of the advertising delegates following the Houston convention. Elaborate plans for the special train and the entertaining of the Circle Tour guests have already been planned by the citizens of Corsicana.

BEAUMONT IN FOUR YEARS ADDS PORT TO ITS HUNDRED-ODD INDUSTRIES

By MARVIN BROWN

BEAUMONT is the seat of Jefferson County with a population of 52,546, according to government estimate as of January, 1925. Jefferson county is the most southeasterly county of the state, with an area of 920 square miles and an estimated population of 120,000. This is a part of what is known as the "Sabine District," and is industrial in character. Agriculture is in its infancy here, except for rice, which has been grown for many years. Government figures will show that in 1915 Jefferson county produced one-fourth the rice raised in Texas and one-tenth of the total of the whole United States for that year. The production since that time, as well as before, has varied in keeping with the law of supply and demand and consequent prices only.

Beaumont is a seaport, connected by ship channel with the Gulf of Mexico, made by dredging the Neches river. The channel was opened to seagoing vessels in 1916, and the tonnage over the municipal wharves and docks has grown from practically nothing at that time to slightly more than 4,000,000 tons in 1924.

While it is considered an industrial center with its more than 100 factories and industrial plant, Beaumont also is the center of a considerable trade territory, embracing a great part of east Texas and southwest Louisiana. This territory embraces thirteen Texas and nine Louisiana counties and covers 18,882 square miles. Four railway trunk lines radiate in every direction, supplying the entire territory with excellent freight and passenger service. The roads are the Southern Pacific, Santa Fe, Gulf Coast Lines and Kansas City Southern.

An industrial payroll of approximately $50,000,000 annually in Jefferson county accounts for many retail establishments in Beaumont, and a half score of wholesale establishments here do an enormous business in the trade territory of which Beaumont is the center.

Jefferson county soil has been found especially adapted to fig culture, and about a thousand acres are now in productive cultivation. Two large preserving plants have been erected in the county already and another is soon to be constructed. Interest is sure to center on this industry for the good reason that the land has been known to yield a gross income of from $300 to $500 per acre when planted to Magnolia figs.

Beaumont is the home of the Pennsylvania Shipyards, Pennsylvania Car Company and the Petroleum Iron Works, three of the leading institutions of the kind in the entire country. It is also the home of South Park College and the South Texas State Fair.

In Jefferson county are located six enormous oil refiners, and the largest oil refinery in the world, the Gulf. The Magnolia refinery is just outside the corporate limits of the city.

Beaumont has a city manager form of government, dominated by a council and board of city commissioners. There are churches and civic and fraternal organizations of practically every name and the moral and social atmosphere is all that could be desired. The educational facilities are of the very best. Those interested in industrial sites or otherwise, and who would like to know more of the city in detail should communicate with the Beaumont Chamber of Commerce and be supplied free of charge with printed illustrated literature of the city and district.

City of Brotherly Love to bid at Houston in Forceful but Dignified Manner—Would Be Second Meet at Ben Franklin's Shrine

Poor Richard Club Leads Drive and Promises Entertainment Befitting the Fane of American Journalism—Confident of Victory

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

ADVERTISING has left ballyhoo and brass band days far behind, and walks today in dignity.

This belief, at any rate, is held by a group of hardworking advertising men, members of the Poor Richard Club of Philadelphia, who are leading a drive to make their city the site of the 1926 convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

Ever since the London meeting, these men have been directing quiet plans to present a dignified bid before the Houston convention, May 9-14, for the privilege of entertaining the delegates in Philadelphia, during the middle of June, next year.

It would be the second time in Benjamin Franklin's home with an exact decade in between.

Philadelphia is making the bid again, because the Sesquicentennial Celebration, the 150th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, will open there June 1, 1926.

This week a representative of EDITOR & PUBLISHER went to Philadelphia to find out the why of their claim to a "100 percent convention city." He met the leaders of the "On-to-Philadelphia" movement, heard their arguments, and made further investigation regarding the desirability of the Quaker City as the A. A. C. W. convention city in 1926.

The meeting with the advertising men took place in the present home of the Poor Richard Club, which stands in a quaint old-time street, South Camac by name. Surrounding it is an atmosphere difficult to duplicate elsewhere in this country. There is in it all the best of Colonial charm. One easily replaces in imagination the modern Stetsons of men passers-by with the navy blue cocked hat above the white wig of Benjamin Franklin's day, as one walks down Camac street, built rather for horseback couriers of Penn's "Greene Countrie Towne," than the taxis of today. Even the old hitching posts remain.

Inside the club, the same atmosphere prevails—the friendliness and quiet of a village tavern a step away from the busy streets of a 20th Century city, called by its proclaimers, the "Workshop of the World." The contrast between past and present is significant. It is dignifield old age and wisdom walking hand in hand with active energetic youth.

The Poor Richard members the writer met in such surroundings are leaders of 600 advertising men who hope their invitation will be accepted for 1926, when the roll of clubs is called in Houston.

Confident of selection, they are not content with waiting for an R. S. V. P. Co-operating with the Philadelphia Club of Advertising Women, of which Mrs. Ellen Patten, of the Philadelphia Inquirer staff is president, the Adcrafts Club, and the newspaper publishers, these men are backing their bid with concrete preparations, preparations chiefly characterized, it is pointed out, by their modern large scale, and old world dignity.

Included among these leaders are Rowe Stewart, vice-president and general manager of the Philadelphia Record, former A. A. C. W. president; present chairman of the Second District A. A. C. W. and president pro tem of the Poor Richard Club; Howard C. Story, of Story, Brooks, & Finley, president-elect of the Poor Richard Club; J. P. Considine, business manager of the Philadelphia North American; and Ex-Governor Stuart of Pennsylvania, former Mayor of Philadelphia, and former Poor Richard president.

Conversation with these men leaves as outstanding the following arguments for Philadelphia in 1926:

The A. A. C. W. would have as a remarkable background, the Sesquicentennial Celebration.

For business meetings the Poor Richard Club has obtained the promise of the halls of the University of Pennsylvania, 10 minutes ride from the city's center. The University is building a new auditorium, capable of seating more than the noted Academy of Music in Philadelphia proper, or nearly 4,000, to be completed before the proposed convention date, according to present expectations. This new auditorium is included in the University's offer of accomodations.

Hotel accomodations rank high among metropolitan centers. There are 356 hotels at the present time. In addition, attention is called to the fact that there are numerous clubs.

The Poor Richard Club itself will move next August into larger headquarters a block South from its present location. President-elect Story expressed the wish the A. A. C. W. convention would also be the possible occasion of a sort of international housewarming for the club's new home.

If an object of an A. A. C. W. convention is large attendance, Philadelphia advertising men are not backward in pointing to the record of 1916, when there was a registration of 6,700.

A convention city should be full of interest, say the "On-to-Philadelphia" backers, and declares it is decidedly easy to prove this requirement is met in view of the city's historical traditions, its beauty, its many industries, and the fact it is a great advertising and publishing center. A circle of 30 miles drawn about Philadelphia, encloses buildings, museums, and collections of more value in Revolutionary history than in any other district in America, is a fact known well by all American citizens who studied history in school.

Accessibility, another convention city headline, is subheaded with the facts that Philadelphia is but three hours from Washington, two hours from New York, and one hour from Atlantic City.

Financial support is a necessary consideration. Someone once asked a famous general what was necessary to carry on a war. There are three things, he replied:

"First, money; second, money, and third, money."

The same applies to a convention and the city which would be its site.

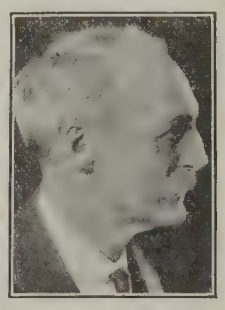
On April 29, a group of Philadelphia's leading business men agreed to form a new Conventions and Exhibitions Committee for the Chamber of Commerce, in an effort to make their city the "convention city of America. A fund that will provide $75,000 to $190,000 will be made available for the work of this committee.

Post-Convention tours have become a customary part of the A. A. C. W.'s annual meetings. The Philadelphia advertising men are already mapping out routes which may be taken in 1926, if the vote stands in their favor. These trips would include trips to the Bethlehem steel works, the powder factories of Wilmington, Del., and historical tours to Valley Forge, Gettysburg, and Washington and Mount Vernon.

Then there would be a tour to the historical points in Philadelphia itself; to Independence Hall, the old State House, built during the years 1732 and 1741, Congress Hall, Old City Hall, Carpenters Hall, Christ Church, Benjamin Franklin's grave, and the Betsy Ross house, where the first American flag was made.

Industrial Philadelphia offers manifold attractions to the advertising man, and the Poor Richard Club informs EDITOR & PUBLISHER its delegates to Houston will carry with them letters from all the prominent manufacturers inviting the A. A. C. W. to inspect their famous plants. Philadelphia, according to Chamber of Commerce figures, produces more than $2,000,000,000 worth of manufactured commodities. The Brill street-car works to which delegates have been invited, constructs three-fifths of all the street cars built annually in the United States. At the Baldwin Locomotive Works, also on the itinerary, the record has been established of producing a locomotive an hour for 30 consecutive hours.

Other places to be visited on a possible convention tour of Philadelphia and Camden would include the Victor Talking Machine Company, the League Island Navy Yard, the Navy Aircraft Factory, where the Shenandoah was built, the Curtis Publishing Company's building, the new plant of the Philadelphia Inquirer, the new Philadelphia Public Ledger building, and the world's largest single-span suspension bridge now under construction to span the Delaware River, connecting Pennsylvania with New Jersey.



The Delaware River Bridge will be officially opened July 4, 1926. It will be practically completed in June of that year, however, the suggested convention month, and the Philadelphia advertising men are seeking to arrange for a special permit for first crossing by A. A. C. W. delegates.

Plants of the Public Ledger, the Inquirer, and the Curtis Publishing Company will particularly attract the attention of newspaper men who would plan to attend the convention, the "On-to-Philadelphia" group believes. The very latest in newspaper planning and engineering, with the most modern mechanical equipment are to be seen in these great newspaper and magazine homes.

As advertising men and publishers, the Philadelphia convention protagonists real-

"PHILADELPHIA, HISTORICAL CAPITAL OF U. S. A." —GOV. PINCHOT INVITES A. A. C. W.

"PHILADELPHIA, the historical capital of the United States, is the natural city for the Associated Advertising Clubs of the world in the Sesqui-Centennial year.

GOV. PINCHOT

"The One Hundred and Fiftieth Anniversary of the Signing of the Declaration of Independence will be celebrated in Philadelphia in 1926. The attention of the entire world will be focused upon the historical shrines where the American Republic had its first beginnings.

"It seems peculiarly appropriate that the Advertising Clubs should meet in Philadelphia next year for that city was the scene of the life work of America's first advertising man, Benjamin Franklin.

"Members of the Advertising Clubs will recall the enthusiastic reception accorded them the last time the convention was held in Philadelphia. The same sort of welcome awaits the convention in 1926.

"Therefore, in the name of the people of Pennsylvania, I wish to invite the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World to hold the 1926 convention in Philadelphia—Pennsylvania's best advertised city.

"GIFFORD PINCHOT,
"Governor of Pennsylvania."

AN INVITATION FROM MAYOR KENDRICK

TO the Many Thousand Readers of EDITOR & PUBLISHER: Greetings:

As the Mayor of the City of Philadelphia, it gives me the greatest pleasure to extend to the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World an invitation, cordial and sincere, to hold its 1926 convention in the city where our great nation was born; where the greatest of all documents, the Declaration of Independence, was adopted and proclaimed, and where the Constitution of the United States of America was drafted and adopted, and which will live forever without a change in its principles.

MAYOR KENDRICK

Every editor and publisher in our country, and every one of their countless associates in business, are men and women known for their patriotism and loyalty to our flag and country. If evidence of their devotion to country were ever called for, no finer proof of that support could be presented than is to be found in the principles written into the history of their splendid organization—The Associated Advertising Clubs of the World—and principally that cardinal thought, "Truth in Advertising."

As Mayor of the City of Philadelphia, which next year will act as the host for all the people of our beloved country in observing the 150th Anniversary of American Independence; and also as President of the Sesqui-Centennial Association, I want to assure everyone that this notable anniversary will be appropriately observed by a worth-while exposition during the period from June 1, 1926 to Dec. 1, 1926, and that our more than two million citizens will heartily and enthusiastically join with me in welcoming you as our guests during the celebration period.

W. FREELAND KENDRICK

ize that information cannot be crammed down throats without the after dinner mint of relaxation and entertainment. In this regard they make the following promises:

The program for the Sesquicentennial calls for an international athletic meet, which promoters are now advertising will be "as great as the Olympics." There will be a "glad way" at the Exposition grounds furnished with all present day amusement makers.

Major League baseball will be in progress at Franklin Field, which at present is being enlarged to be the largest of its kind in the United States.

Theaters will be presenting recent Broadway attractions. For that matter Broadway itself is but two hours distant.

A yacht race is also scheduled for next June to take place during the proposed convention period.

And as for golf, one is told there are 40 courses close by Philadelphia, among them being the four championship courses of Merion, Whitemarsh, Huntingdon, and Pine Valley. The latter is said to be as fine as the famous links of St. Andrew in Scotland.

For entertainment of more of an advertising character, it is planned in the event of success at Houston to ask Gilbert E. Gable to duplicate his famous water pageant depicting advertising power and growth, in Fairmont Park, a feature of 1916, which was then most favorably received.

The trend in A. A. C. W. conventions has been toward an educational informative basis, and away from fireworks, gewgaws, and jimcracks, "conclave" baubles of years ago, is the final point stressed by the followers of poor Richard, who repeat their aim will be dignity and a well-rounded business program made entertaining with the aid of the more sophisticated amusements.

With respect to the educational trend of the organized advertising movement, the Philadelphians consider they are unusually fortunate.

Aside from the University campus, declared an ideal setting for a convention when first employed by the A. A. C. W. for that purpose in 1916, the proposed program framers will have within easy reach of invitation the best advertising brains of the nation.

Poor Richards, likewise, are justly proud in their ability to say they maintain the only endowed school of advertising connected with an advertising club in all the districts of the A. A. C. W.—the Charles Morris Price School of Advertising and Journalism.

Operating under a $40,000 endowment, this school recently graduated its first class of 45 students. Applications of 400 students were turned down this year because of lack of facilities, and already more than that number have applied for enrollment in the forthcoming term, which opens next Fall. In the new club house, the third floor is being remodeled as class rooms, with a separate outside entrance.

As a further and final example of the new advertising dignity, with which Philadelphians plan to make their bid for the convention is the book which Poor Richard members have published to present as a gift to the delegates at Houston.

The book is entitled "Looking Ahead Philadelphia." It is the exclusive work of Poor Richard members and is copyright by the club, and, based on the writings of Benjamin Franklin, tells the story of Philadelphia and its interest to advertising men.

The dedication reads: "To the members of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World and also all citizens of these United States of America, who, with us, are co-owners of your Philadelphia by the Poor Richard Club."

"Perhaps you wonder at the title we give this book," the foreword reads. "Your home may be on the shores of the Great Lakes, where the Pacific washes our western coast, in the southland, in fact, in almost any place except the town that Penn founded and called 'The City of Brotherly Love.'

"But the fact remains that Philadelphia is one of the definite properties, you, as a citizen of our United States, possess. For Philadelphia is peculiarly a part of our nation's very being, the mother of its birth and the nurse of its childhood days.

"Those of us so favored as to still reside in the geographical boundaries of Philadelphia are only custodians for you who are its joint spiritual owners. Therefore, we know you will not misunderstand what might seem under other circumstances boastfulness. For we speak not about ourselves but about you and our fathers, what they started and how their work is being continued today by us in your Philadelphia.

"And we feel it incumbent upon ourselves in 1926, the hundred and fiftieth anniversary of our nation's birth, to invite you back again to your Philadelphia. This little book is that invitation. It is offered to you by 'The City of Brotherly Love' and the 'Poor Richard Club.'"

That club is constantly growing and is forced to limit its membership stringently. Big names are on its roles, and among them are those who are attending the Houston convention, hoping to bring back word of an accepted invitation. The Houston delegation from Philadelphia will include such men and women as:

Rowe Stewart, general manager Philadelphia Record; N. A. Considine, vice-president of the Poor Richard Club, and president of the Paper House of Pennsylvania; John H. Cross, vice-president of the club, and president of John H. Cross Company; Howard C. Story, president-elect of the club, and member of the firm of Story, Brooks, & Finley; P. C. Staples, ex-president of the club, and vice-president of the Bell Telephone Company of Pennsylvania; Leonard Ormerod, information manager of the Bell Telephone Company; Mont Wright, advertising manager of the John B. Stetson Company; Arthur H. Bonsor, president of Arthur H. Bonsor Company; Morgan English, publicity director, Bellevue Stratford Hotel; J. B. POOR RICHARDS NAME STORY PRESIDENT

Agency Man Chosen to Lead Philadelphia Advertising Group at Elections Held May 4 — Other Officers Announced

Howard C. Story of the advertising firm of Story, Brooks & Finley, New York and Philadelphia, on Monday was elected to the presidency of the Poor Richard Club of Philadelphia, one of the largest advertising clubs in the country.

Mr. Story is a widely known clubman of Philadelphia holding memberships in all the important clubs of the city, and was one of the founders of the Poor Richard Club.

The new president of the Poor Richards has done much to further the growth of the Philadelphia advertising organization, and is chiefly responsible for the expansion movement of the Club which resulted in the decision to abandon the old clubhouse at 239 South Camac street and to take over the old Leidy residence at 1319 Locust street, upon which alterations and improvements are now being made. Mr. Story is personally supervising the furnishing of the new club house.

Last year Mr. Story was president of the banquet committee of the club and it was chiefly due to his efforts that the dinner and entertainment given at the Bellevue-Stratford was a signal success.

Mr. Story is not only a golfer but a good golfer and already has one leg on the Club cup which must be won three times in order to remain in the possession of the winner. Mr. Story's name was placed on the cup last summer when the first golf tournament was held.

The new president, who takes office Monday, July 2, is married and has two children, a daughter of eighteen years and a boy of five. The Storys make their home in Germantown, a suburb of Philadelphia.

"BETTER MAILING WEEK"

Announced by Postmaster General New to Cut Dead Letter Waste

Postmaster General New this week set aside the first week in June as "Better Mailing Week," when an active nation-wide campaign will be waged to reduce, as far as possible, the steadily mounting business of the Dead Letter Office, and to return to constructive channels the appalling waste occasioned by misdirected mail.

Last year 21,618,168 undeliverable letters, representing an increase of 2,379,620 over the previous year, and 803,543 parcel post packages, an increase of 109,610, strayed from their rightful owners and were impounded in the Dead Letter Office.

During the same period the Government spent approximately $1,740,000 to look up addresses so that 200.000,000 other pieces of mail might go forward to their intended destinations.

The principal point to be stressed in the campaign is to induce the mailer to place a return address on each piece of mail.

Atlantic City Typographical Union Signs New Contract

Increases in salaries have been granted members of the Atlantic City Typographical Union, No. 377 by an agreement which provides for an increase of $4 per week for journeymen printers and from $2 to $7 per week for apprentices.

By the terms of a three-year agreement, $2 of the $4 weekly increases have become effective, with $1 automatic increases on May 1, 1926 and May 1, 1927. Apprentices receive increases ranging from $2 for the second year of apprenticeship to $7 dollars per week for the last period apprenticeship.

PRESIDENT-ELECT STORY OF POOR RICHARDS EXTENDS WELCOME TO NEW HOME

HOWARD C. STORY

"ADVERTISING men the world over know Philadelphia as a center of interest to them in their business, a city admirably suited as a gathering place for members of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

"Philadelphia advertising men entertained the A.A.C.W. here in 1916. We believe we are even better equipped and prepared for 1926.

"If the A.A.C.W. comes to Philadelphia next year we can sincerely insure delegates a profitable and entertaining convention week. This is no empty promise.

"All members of the Poor Richard Club are enthusiastically behind me in cordially inviting you to make Philadelphia your convention city in 1926. You will be welcomed gladly to our new club house, into which we move next August, and your visit will be to us in the nature of an international housewarming celebration.

"We invite you to Philadelphia, because we believe we have that 100 per cent of interest to offer you advertising men and women without which no convention is worthy the name.

"You may not find brass bands and fireworks here, but we can promise without reserve brass tacks and dignified amusement.

"Houston, we are all certain, will mark another important milestone in the progress of advertising. We are willing to bend our best efforts towards making Philadelphia as important in 1926.

"We invite you to start our will towards accomplishment of a fact." —Howard C. Story, of Story, Brooks & Finley, 1925-26, president of the Poor Richard Club, Philadelphia.

LOS ANGELES WANTS 1926 N.E.A. CONVENTION

Southern California Editorial Association Backing Move to Bring Editors to Golden State—Committee Appointed

The Southern California Editorial Association is sponsoring a movement to invite the National Editorial Association to hold its 1926 convention in California. A special committee has been named from the association to formulate plans of entertainment and extend the invitation to come to California. Heading this committee is J. F. Craemer, publisher of the Orange Daily News. He is assisted by F. M. Keffer of the Van Nuys News, first vice-president of the association; J. R. Gabbert of the Riverside Enterprise, president, Timothy Brownhill of the Puente Journal, secretary and vice-president of the N. E. A. for California, and Ben H. Read, managing director of the association. Under the plan Los Angeles would be the convention city.

Hereafter the Association will not lend its name to giving publicity to any one community or corporation or organization. This change is in keeping with business policy recently adopted by the organization and follows closely on the appointment of Ben H. Read as a paid managing director of the organization with permanent officers for the serving of members.

"The Southern California Editorial Association is now organized on a business basis and as such expects to center its activities on business problems of mutual interest to its members, rather than to engage in junkets or social activities" it has announced. "Members of the Executive Committee at a recent meeting adopted a resolution to the effect that hereafter the association as an organization, would participate in only such activities, trips and junkets or gatherings as the association itself may arrange or sponsor, consisting of an annual business meeting.

"Because its membership represents varying community, political and other affiliations, the association as an organization will not give its official recognition to activities that might have for their purpose the gaining of influence for any individual community as opposed to other communities of the gaining for corporations, individuals or organizations, the influence and editorial support of the members of the association.

"All activities, trips, or junkets, except those sponsored and arranged by the association, will be left to the individual decision of each publisher as to whether he wishes to participate in them."

MERCED, CAL., DAILIES MERGED

Evening Sun and Morning Star Now Under Single Control

Consolidation of the Merced (Cal.) Evening Sun and the Merced Morning Star was effected May 1, the papers appearing on that date as the Merced Sun-Star.

The publication will be printed week day evenings, with a morning edition for rural circulation. Both the Star and the Sun were old papers of Merced, having been published as weeklies, then dailies for more than 50 years.

Behind the merger is an exclusive patronage guarantee fostered by business men protecting the field of the Sun-Star for a period of five years. The editor of the Sun-Star is Ray McClung, director of the Country Newspaper Division of the Committee on Public Information during the war and afterwards a special writer in Washington and in the middle-west. Peter McClung, newspaper owner of Pomeroy, Wash., and corwin Radcliffe for 40 years a Merced newspaper man, will be associate editors.

Hugh McClung is business manager. The Sun-Star will carry Associated Press leased wire, NEA Service, Inc., and will change from 7 to 8 columns on May 9, it is announced.

A. A. C. W. URGED TO VISIT SESQUICENTENNIAL

Celebration of 150th Anniversary of U. S. Independence to Open June 1 Presented as Strong Argument for Holding 1926 Convention in Philadelphia.

By WILLIAM W. MATOS
President, Matos Advertising Agency, Philadelphia

ONE of the strongest arguments presented by "On-to-Philadelphia" protagonists in making their bid for the 1926 convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World is the fact that next June the Sesquicentennial International Exposition will be celebrated there. All advertising men and women will be anxious to attend.

On Tuesday, June 1, next year, the Sesquicentennial to observe the 150th anniversary of the Independence of the United States of America, will open its gates to the peoples of the entire world. For six months, or until Wednesday, Dec. 1, 1926, inclusive, the exposition, probably the most comprehensive the world has ever witnessed, will graphically portray with its thousands of exhibits, the wonderful advances made in education, art, science, industry, trade and commerce.

Philadelphia is the logical place for this, the greatest of American celebrations. It was here in 1774 that the representatives of the original colonies first assembled to discuss Independence; It was in this city that the Declaration of Independence was adopted and proclaimed July 4, 1776; it was here that the Constitution of the United States was adopted in 1787, and Philadelphia was the Capital of the United States from 1790 to 1800, when the city of Washington became the Capital.

That the Sesquicentennial, with its exhibits from all parts of the world, will undoubtedly have a larger attendance than all previous World's Fairs, is assured by reason of the geographical location of Philadelphia. Within a radius of 140 miles, there is a population aggregating 21,000,000, with three of the country's greatest ports—New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore. In this territory are produced the preatest variety and quantity of the world's requirements. So diversified are the manufactures of Philadelphia alone that for many years the city has been known the world over as the "World's Greatest Workshop."

The Sesquicentennial is the celebration of all the people of the United States. The United States Government, by resolution of Congress, is actively cooperating and has established a commission composed of the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Commerce, to represent the United States in connection with the exposition, and the President of the United States has been authorized to appoint a National Advisory Commission to be composed of two citizens from each State, and from Alaska, Hawaii, the Philippine Islands, Porto Rico, the Canal Zone and the Virgin Islands. All the various executive departments and independent establishments of the government are authorized to collect and prepare exhibits for the government's display.

At the present time, official invitations are being issued by the government to all foreign nations and to their peoples to participate in the exposition, and especially to make exhibits showing the advances made in the arts and sciences by their peoples. Unofficially, several governments have already made inquiries and it is reported that they will be represented at the exposition by their own buildings.

The site for the exposition is one of the best available within the confines of the city. On one side is the Delaware River, where there is room for the navies of all the nations to have representative vessels, and it is easily reached from the center of the city. Adjacent on the south is the Philadelphia Navy Yard, the largest fresh water naval station in the United States.

One part of the grounds includes about 400 acres, which is to be devoted exclusively for exhibition buildings. Directly to one side of this area, is a large city park, comprising 275 acres, upon which will be located the various state and foreign buildings, some of which may be permanent structures. Adjacent to this exhibition space are vast sections of ground which may be utilized should the occasion require it. One large tract will be set aside for amusement features, while several hundred acres close by will be used for aviation and automobile parking.

The total space available for all the features of the exposition is larger than for any preceding World's Fair.

Within a few weeks actual construction work will be started upon the new city stadium, which is to be one of the attractions of the exposition, and which will have a seating capacity of at least 100,000 persons. This will be one of the most interesting features of the exposition, and in it during the celebration period will be depicted through pageantry, the history of the nation, as well as many other features, some of which will have international interest.

Work is also about to start upon the erection of the numerous exposition structures, such as the buildings to house the great industrial exhibits, both domestic and foreign; agriculture, food products, horticulture, manufactures, mines, transportation, machinery, motor industries, education, fine arts, etc.

With the exception of the state and foreign buildings, the architecture of the entire exposition will follow the lines of the American Colonial type.

One of the most important features of the exposition, especially inviting to all the foreign nations which will participate, will be the many advantages offered by the Commercial Museum of Philadelphia. In itself the museum will become a most important factor in helping to show to the people, not only of the United States, but of the entire world, the products of every country. After the close of the exposition, those nations which will desire to leave behind permanent displays of their products will find ample space in the Commercial Museum.

From an historical standpoint, no city in the United States is so full of places of interest closely allied with the birth and growth of the nation, as is Philadelphia. Old Carpenters' Hall, where the First Continental Congress met in 1774, still stands in its original condition. Close by is the old State House, known the world over as Independence Hall, where the second Continental Congress held all its sessions; where the Declaration of Independence was adopted, signed and first proclaimed to the world, and where the Nation's most precious relic, the Liberty Bell, is carefully guarded. In this building, George Washington was commissioned General. From 1790 to 1800, this building was the capitol of the nation, and in it Washington served as President of the United States. It also housed, during that same period, the national Congress. In the State House and the adjoining building, known as Congress Hall, the Constitution of the United States was framed and adopted in 1787. In this city the first American Flag was made, then thirteen stars and thirteen stripes. The resolution of the American Congress fixing the Stars and Stripes as the nation's flag was adopted in the Old State House on June 14, 1777.

ADVERTISING WOMEN BACK PHILADELPHIA'S CALL

MORE han 100 advertising women in Philadelphia are anxious to take this opportunity to invite other women in the same profession to come to our city in 1926.

By next June we hope to be in our own home which will be advertising Headquarters for the Women Delegates,—but whether or not we have this home, we will do all in our power to make you glad you came to Philadelphia rather than any other city.

Everybody will be coming to visit our Sesqui-Centennial Exhibition, which will portray the tremendous strides in modern industries, and as Advertising Women, you will welcome this opportunity, I feel sure, to see in pageant form the industrial history of the United States.

Aside from the Centennial, Philadelphia has many interests to intrigue the Advertising Woman. Our city has been called the Workshop of the World. It is an advertising center in which many women play important roles. It is also the Cradle of American Independence, and the home of Betsy Ross.

Philadelphia—Key Market of the Atlantic Seaboard—

Invites You to Its Sesqui-Centennial 1926!

"WELCOME All Advertising Men"—to the Home of Poor Richard, America's first great advertiser! Philadelphia opens its arms and its heart to the Advertising Convention. Amplest accommodation in its great new hotels—historical sightseeing, recreation, amusement and sport—and the opportunity to note its great strides in industrial and civic activities.

And among other noteworthy sights—the Public Ledger—the newest, largest and most modern newspaper plant in America.

Just as the Sesqui-Centennial of 1926 symbolizes the growth of our Country in its 150 years of eventful life, so does the new plant of the Public Ledger evidence the splendid growth of this great newspaper which, in the 12 years of ownership by Cyrus H. K. Curtis, has increased its circulation from 45.000 to more than 300,000 daily; Sunday from 70,000 to 300,000 and its advertising from 5,000,000 to 27,846,000 lines.

One of the unusual features of the exposition will be the fact that all the city's many thousand manufacturing plants —from the great Baldwin Locomotive Works, which during the past ninety years has built more than 58,000 locomotives for service in all parts of the world, to the youngest manufacturer of nationally and internationally used products— will be open to the exposition visitors.

Another notable feature of the exposition will be the opening of the new Delaware River Bridge—the longest single span suspension bridge in the world—on July 4, 1926. This bridge is now rapidly being pushed to completion and when finished will be one of the wonders of the world.

The Mayor of Philadelphia, the Hon. W. Freeland Kendrick, is the president of the Sesquicentennial Association, and is enthusiastically interested in making the exposition, and its attendant celebrations, of general interest to the peoples of the entire world. The Director-General of the exposition, Colonel David Charles Collier, has a world-wide reputation in the management of great expositions. He was the Director-General of the Panama-California Exposition at San Diego, California, in 1914, and Commissioner-General representing the United States at the Brazilian Exposition, at Rio de Janeiro, in 1922. Included in the management of the exposition and the many celebrations incident to the Sesquicentennial Anniversary, are many of the best known citizens of Philadelphia and the State of Pennsylvania.

One of the most interesting features of the entire plan is the fact that the site for the exposition offers unexcelled facilities, by rail and water, for hundreds of thousands of visitors to the exposition daily without seriously interfering with the traffic conditions in the city. Visitors from all parts of the United States will be able, if they desire, to go direct to the exposition grounds without passing through the city proper. Housing facilities for the handling of the greatest attendances ever known by any previous World's Fair, are now being studied and adequate facilities will be ready by the time the exposition opens its gates, June 1, 1926.

U. OF PENNSYLVANIA INVITES A.A.C.W.

J. HARTLEY-MERRICK, vice-provost of the University of Pennsylvania, has invited members of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World to make use of University Halls should Poor Richard's invitation to Philadelphia in 1926 be accepted in Houston.

Mr. Merrick's invitation is contained in a letter addressed to Rowe Stewart, vice-president and general manager of the Philadelphia Record. It reads in part:

"The suggestion of your desire to meet here was most gratifying to us; and if you shall find it convenient to hold your sessions after June 16, the date of our 1926 Commencement Day, we shall be only too happy to place at the disposal of the Associated Advertising Clubs the privileges and facilities of our entire University plant, for their use and enjoyment.

"Thanking you sincerely for the opportunity to serve such a vital and representative organization."

ORATORICAL FINALS THIS WEEK

Seven School Children to Compete in Washington for Championship

Two girls and five boys will compete in Washington, D. C., Friday of this week for the oratorical championship of the United States and $5,000 in prizes. The seven are the sole survivors of the 1,400,000 school children who have participated in this year's National Oratorical Contest on the Constitution sponsored by 28 daily newspapers of the country. Details of the contest were told in last week's EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

The national finalists, in the order in which they will speak, are:

Miss Asenath Graves, 16, Washington, champion of the District of Columbia.

Miss Flora Longenecker, 16, Ilion, N. Y., Northeastern champion.

Robert Sessions, 15, Birmingham, Ala., Southern champion.

Eugene F. McElmeel, 16, Los Angeles, Calif., Pacific champion.

George Stansell, 17, Chicago, Ill., Central States champion.

Philip Glatfelter, 17, Columbia, Pa., Eastern Champion.

Max N. Kroloff, 17, Sioux City, Iowa, Midwestern champion.

The meeting will be presided over by John Hays Hammond. President Coolidge will make an address on the meaning of the contest. Then the seven contestants will speak, each being allowed only 10 minutes.

LEE'S TEXT FOR NEWS

Director of Journalism School Advocates Complete Publicity for Crime

Dr. James Melvin Lee, director of the department of journalism, New York University, and writer of "Our Own World of Letters" department for EDITOR & PUBLISHER, speaking in New York presented his text for the printing of news:

"Whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are true, print these things. Moreover print the things of good report."

WE TAKE this space to extend to the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World an invitation to hold their Annual Convention of 1926 in the City of Philadelphia.

The Advertising Clubs will doubtless receive like invitations from other cities. We hope, however, that all such communities will hold their hospitable impulses in abeyance for a year while the origin of our Nation is being suitably celebrated in the place of its birth.

This occasion calls for a great gathering. With our overlooked blessings recalled; with our overworked differences forgotten; with our great achievements reviewed; with our wonderful future considered, let us gather in our Nation's birthplace and thank God for the past and take courage for the better days that are yet to be.

"THE newspapers of Philadelphia are glad to join with the advertising men in inviting members of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World to our city in 1926."

FREDERICK FORBES

This was the statement made to EDITOR & PUBLISHER by William Simpson, business manager of the Philadelphia Bulletin. Other Philadelphia newspaper men urged selection of Philadelphia as the next A. A. C. W. convention city.

"We who know Philadelphia," Mr. Simpson continued, "we who have watched its remarkable growth and progress, feel there is little need of detail in explaining why it would be well chosen as the convention site. Its fame as a hostess city has spread to far corners of the United States.

"Needless to say, the Bulletin will do all in its power to be of assistance to A. A. C. W. delegates during their stay in Philadelphia should our invitation be accepted."

"The Associated Advertising Clubs of the World in Philadelphia in 1926, without a doubt," said Frederick Forbes, managing editor of the Philadelphia North American.

"In 1926 Philadelphia will celebrate the 150th birthday of the nation one of the founders of which was Benjamin Franklin, the Father of Advertising.

"The A. A. C. W. cannot and do not want to miss being a part of this great event, and aside from this historical consideration, there is Philadelphia itself.

"It is the logical convention city of this country. It is the center of the Advertising population in the United States. Draw a circle about Philadelphia. Within a 300 mile radius you will take in more than 50,000,000 people.

"It is more easy of access than any other center of population. There are more advertised things manufactured in Philadelphia than in any other city. Philadelphia has greater facilities for entertaining advertising men than any other city has.

"Finally, those who will attend the convention will have a more pleasant and a more profitable time in Philadelphia than they could have any place else."

Melville F. Ferguson, managing editor of the Philadelphia Record, issued the following statement:

"Assuming that advertising men get together to talk shop, I can conceive of no more appropriate place for their conference than that in which they may learn at first hand, not only orally but ocularly, something new of the original sources of the commodities for the exploitation of which their art has been developed; something new of the retail methods of distribution; something new of the production of ideas to bridge the gap between buyer and seller, and something new of the mechanical processes by which those ideas are translated into the definite form called advertising matter. Philadelphia's great manufacturing plants her enterprising stores and her printing presses offer the members of the A. A. C. W. a post-graduate course in their major study.

"I would not address Philadelphia's appeal to advertising men in a lighter vein, although this city has more solid and substantial attractions of the kind usually listed in "points of interest" than any other on the continent. In my judgment, the A. A. C. W. ought to come to Philadelphia in 1926 because Philadelphia can add to their stock of information about the art in which they make their living. Business will come before the pleasure that looms up as an added attraction in the Sesquicentennial."

Cyrus H. K. Curtis, owner of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, is anxious to have newspaper members of the A. A. C. W. visit the plant now being constructed for his morning and evening newspapers. The plant of the Curtis Publishing Company, facing Independence Square, where the Saturday Evening Post and other Curtis publications are produced, is always a place of interest to publishers and advertising men.

No A. A. C. W. Precedents Broken

Philadelphia advertising men point out that no precedents would be broken should Houston delegates vote to hold the 1926 convention in Philadelphia for the second time. Two other cities have been hosts to the Associated Advertising Clubs of the world two different years. These conventions, similar to Philadelphia, were held ten years apart. They were in Chicago in 1905 and 1915 and in St. Louis 1907 and 1917.

ROWE STEWART, FORMER A. A. C. W. PRESIDENT INVITES YOU TO PHILADELPHIA

"PHILADELPHIA is the logical place to hold the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World next year for the important reason that this country will be celebrating its birthday at that time in our city which is the birthplace of the nation.

"Every advertising man and woman will wish to visit Independence Hall and see the Liberty Bell, the ringing of which certainly was the most effectvie piece of advertising in American history—it advertised a new form of government.

"In advocating Philadelphia, we not only consider its historical traditions, but speak from the standpoint that it is an industrial center, located within short distance of the Capitol, the center of our official government. Its very accessibility we believe makes it an ideal convention city.

"One point of interest, of which not much is heard, but which should be of particular interest to advertising men and women, is Philadelphia's Commercial Museum. There not only can be had information concerning the industries of every country in the world, but also exhibits of the notable manufacturing products. The museum is especially complete in its information concerning Central and South America, a fact that is pertinent since the Pan-American Conference is becoming more and more an important feature of the A. A. C. W. meetings.

"It will be worth your while, we believe, to come next year and visit historic Philadelphia, industrial Philadelphia, Philadelphia, the 'workshop of the world.' WOOD'S LAST MESSAGE TO CLUB PRESIDENTS

Late President Jarvis A. Wood of the Poor Richard Club Urged Support of Philadelphia's Claim Before He Died

In a letter written a short time before his death, Jarvis A. Wood, late president of the Poor Richard Club, urged club presidents to support Philadelphia's claim at the meeting of the presidents in Houston.

The letter reads as follows:

"Of the many important questions to be decided at Houston during the Convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, there is one of particular interest to the Poor Richard Club and to the membership of every club in the Association. We refer to the selection of the Convention city for 1926.

"That year will mark the 150th Anniversary of American independence. This event will be fittingly celebrated in Philadelphia by an exposition of international scope. The plans for this exposition are now being perfected. The City of Philadelphia has appropriated an initial $500,000. The State of Pennsylvania has appropriated $1,000,000; President Coolidge and Congress have given not only moral support but financial support, having appropriated an expense fund of $25,000 for the Commission; and undoubtedly a substantial Federal appropriation will follow. This is the background that will be set in 1926.

"Now to get right down to advertising and the Convention for that year. Philadelphia offers unexcelled facilities and accommodations for such a convention. We have here ample and most desirable departmental convention halls, we have here a large convention hall for the general sessions; we have here hotel accommodations that cannot be surpassed; we have railroad and steamship transportation facilities; we have plenty of money, and we have a square-jawed determination to put the Convention over in a way that will make history. We believe you will admit that the Poor Richard Club is capable of doing this.

"Moreover, Philadelphia will attract advertising and business men from all over the world because of the Sesqui-Centennial exposition; because of Philadelphia's historical associations, its reputation as the "Workshop of the World," its standing as an educational center, its position as a source of many national advertising campaigns that have achieved signal success.

"Entertainment, of course, there will be—plenty of it; but it will be so spotted on the program as not to interfere with the business sessions of the convention. Bear in mind, too, that Atlantic City, the "Playground of America," is just one hour's ride on the finest equipped trains in the world—and Atlantic City in June is glorious.

"We ask you to support our claims at the meeting of the Presidents in Houston and in the assembled convention. May we have this support? We assure you that you will have no cause for regret. We assure you that the Convention in 1926, if it comes to Philadelphia, will set a new mark for future conventions to shoot at.

Yours for 1926 in Philadelphia,
JARVIS A. WOOD.

Two New Daily Plants

The Philadelphia Inquirer and the Philadelphia Public Ledger are both building new plants, which will be completed before next year. The new home of the Inquirer is being erected on North Broad street at Callowhill. It is seventeen stories high and is surmounted by a beautiful clock tower. Rankin, Kellogg and Crane are the architects. The public Ledger building will occupy the entire block bounded by 6th and 7th, Chestnut and Sansom streets.

officers of the A. A. C. W. are paid and that their tenure is usually a drain on their personal funds and time. Mr. Buckley also has a host of friends among the membership. He has held high office in the Direct Mail Advertising Association since its establishment and is a frequent speaker on direct-mail advertising at district meetings. He is president of Buckley, Dement & So., Chicago.

New Yorkers appear certain of Mr. Woodbridge's election; partisams of other candidates will probably do most of their talking at Houston.

Philadelphia, as will be apparent by the pages of this issue, is making a determined bid for the 1926 meeting, to be held as a part of the city's sesquicentennial celebration of the Declaration of Independence. It is the home of the best known advertising group in the country—the Poor Richard Club—and the city is popular with advertising men. Ten years ago the Associated Clubs held in Philadelphia the best-attended convention in their history and Philadelphia proposes that they be given the opportunity to break this record, next year.

Opinion is general that the Quaker City will get what it wants from the Houston meeting, but not without spirited opposition from St. Petersburg, Fla. The delegation from "the land of milk and honey" will be strong in numbers and will be accompanied to Houston by a Scotch Highlanders band, equipped with such gentle instruments as bagpipes, fifes, and two-handed bass and kettle drums. Another candidate will come from the new American Riviera—Miami which seeks pledges for the 1927 convention. As a rule, the convention city is chosen only for one year in advance, but this rule was broken in Milwaukee in 1922, when the convention pledged itself to London for 1924.

The "dark horse" of the city contest is Detroit, which for several months has been the source of rumors that it wanted the 1926 convention. No definite stand has been announced by the Detroit Adcraft Club, and the convention may be called upon to hear its claims.

Most of these questions will in all likelihood be decided early in the week by the constitutional bodies and the action of the convention Thursday afternoon, it may be predicted, will take the form of ratification.

Meanwhile, the great majority of the deelgates will seek the pleasures that Houston and environs afford.

A bumper crop of real Southern hospitality is awaiting the delegates and the management of the Houston hotels plan to extend themselves to show the visitors what the real interpretation of hospitality is in the South.

All of the dishes, famous below the Mason and Dixon line, will be on the menus.

Hot biscuit, with sorghum molasses, famous fried chicken, barbecued beef, hot cakes, waffles and a thousand and one other tasty morsels that only old time Mammies know how to cook, will be served up to tickle the palates.

While hotel managers have fretted and fumed about their "feeds," the entertainment committee have not been idle.

Realizing the handicap under which they were working after the marvelous entertainment furnished by the Britishers last year, the committee decided to make the amusement for the guests entirely Texan.

So a truly Texas rodeo, with the best artists that the state can provide, has been arranged.

Pageants, depicting the history of the biggest state in the Union will be given on the famous San Jacinto Battleground, where Gen. Sam Houston with his 700 odd men defeated the Mexican General Santa Anna with more than twice that number.

A musical revue telling of the state's history and called "South of 36" will be given in the famous Hermann Park, in the only open air municipal theatre in the state.

A day in Galveston, called the Atlantic City of the South, will also be offered the visitors. Surf bathing, dancing, a treasure hunt on the beach and a barbecue will be the entertainment. A business session will also be held.

Music? "There won't be nothing else but," as the darkies say.

Topping the list will be President Calles' own private band from Mexico City. He has loaned the band to Houston for the convention. It is made up of the best musicians in the Southern Republic and compares with the famous U. S. Marine Band.

Then comes the Royal Scotch Highlander's Band from St. Petersburg, Fla., while lesser musical organizations will fill in the gaps between concerts played by these two.

Dancing is provided for those who enjoy it at pra tically all of the hotels and pavilions in the city. Special parties have been arrangd for nearly every evening in order that sessions of the convention will not socially tie up the delegates.

To make transportation easy for visitors 1,000 courtesy cars have been provided by the committee on arrangements. The autos will be at the service of delegates at all times and will take them wherever they want to go.

In making all of the arrangements the women who will accompany the delegates have not been overlooked. Teas, dinners, theatre parties, sightseeing tours, garden parties, dances and sightseeing tours will keep them occupied practically all of the time.

At adjournment of the convention a series of Texas Tours have been arranged for delegates. There are four and they will give the visitors a clear conception of the big state and all of its varied industries.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER AT HOUSTON CONVENTION

EDITOR & PUBLISHER will maintain Convention Headquarters in a booth near the entrance of the Convention Hall, in the City Auditorium. Copies of this issue, containing the complete program, and much other information of value to convention visitors, will be available there for all callers. Arthur T. Robb, Managing Editor, will represent EDITOR & PUBLISHER at the Convention. He will stop at the Rice Hotel.

MANY INDUSTRIES HELP OIL AND CATTLE KEEP FORT WORTH BOOMING

FORT WORTH is essentially a manufacturing city and recent developments attest her continued growth in this line. The four packing plants located in the city constitute the largest industrial group in the Southwest. She is the largest terminal grain market in the South. Within the last year, one grain elevator of 1,750,000 bushels capacity, another of 700,000 bushels capacity and an addition to a third of 300,000 bushels capacity, have been completed. Plans for a new flour mill have been drawn and with its completion, Fort Worth will have a feed and flour milling capacity of 6,000 barrels daily.

Additions and enlargements at four of the city's eight petroleum refineries, completed within the past year, have cost more than $3,000,000.

A cotton mill of 22,000 spindles, the largest in Texas, was completed in December, and a night shift put at work on March 1. A cement plant of 6,000 barrels daily capacity will begin operations in April. A rolling mill has recently been converted into an electric steel plant which melts and re-rolls scrap, of which an almost unlimited supply is available from the oil fields, railroads and manufacturing plants of the area.

Fort Worth is fortunately situated in regard to a supply of raw materials. Meat animals, cotton, grain and petroleum, which are four of the five principal raw materials entering into American manufactures, are each of them produced in her preferential trade territory in volume giving each an annual value of more than $100,000,000.

With 18 rail outlets Fort Worth has the facilities for distribution which are essential to industrial growth. One out of every 35 freight cars loaded in the United States is consigned to or through the city and more than 50 per cent of the railway traffic entering the state passes through Fort Worth.

Her fuel supply is another great asset. There is brought to the city through five pipe lines, natural gas from fifteen gas fields. Eight refineries furnish an ample supply of fuel oil. Bituminous coal fields of almost unlimited extent lie to the north and west at a distance of from 40 to 100 miles.

The existence of a number of very large industries has attracted a large and permanent supply of labor which is supplemented by the transient supply always available in large railroad centers. The great majority of the laborers are native white, the city having only 5 per cent foreign born and 12 per cent negro.

Health and climatic conditions are excellent. With a greater elevation than that part of Texas lying to the East, the climate is invigorating and yet so mild as to make work in the open possible through most of the winter. Federal figures for 1924, showed only two cities of more than 100,000 population in the United States with as low a death rate as Fort Worth.

Lake Worth, lying five miles northwest of the city, is the principal source of water supply. The lake is fourteen miles long and from one to two miles wide. It was created by damming the West fork of the Trinity river. More than half a million visitors are attracted to the municipal bathing beach at the lake each season. Boating and fishing are excellent. Around the lake residents of North Texas have built their summer homes.

It was the success of Lake Worth, from every standpoint, that was responsible for Fort Worth's undertaking the greatest water project ever conceived in Texas. This is the creation of a series of great reservoirs that will impound 1,150,000 acre feet of water, which with the estimated rate of replenishment, will make available 2,000,000 acre feet per year.

Fort Worth's latest big project is the building of a railroad from Fort Worth to Tucumcari, N. M., which will tap the rich and rapidly developing Panhandle and Plains country of West Texas.

Suburbs larger in area than the city proper were annexed to Fort Worth in 1922. A conservative estimate of the present population of the city is 175,000. The estimate of the population of the Bureau of Census as of 1924, showed an increase of 39 per cent over that of the 1920 census.

Cotton, grain and livestock handled by Fort Worth dealers reached a volume of more than $100,000,000 per annum for each of these items.

Fort Worth is the principal food distributing center of the Southwest, produce, fruits, groceries, hardware, oil field supplies, drugs and dry goods comprising the principal lines.

Fort Worth's principal trade territory in West Texas contains so few large towns that a great deal of retail trade comes to the city from outside its nominal retail shopping area, which lies within a 150 mile radius North, West and South.

The most recent estimate of the volume of retail trade shows total expenditures in the city of $108,000,000 with 131,500 buyers. It is also shown that more than 25 per cent of Fort Worth families have earned incomes in excess of $1,800 per year, although for the United States at large only 13 per cent of the families have incomes in excess of that amount.

GALVESTON, LAPPED BY WAVES OF GULF, VAUNTS ITS GLORY AS A PORT

By GARNETT B. CLARKE

GALVESTON, Tex., seat of the county of the same name, delights in figures which prove the city to be the "second port in America" in volume of business handled.

The site of the present city of Galveston was purchased from the Republic of Texas by Col. M. B. Menard in 1836 when he purchased one "league of land" for $50,000. It was chartered as a city in January, 1839, having previously been made a port of entry in 1837. The population has increased from 36,981 in 1910 to 53,138 in 1924, according to statistics compiled by the board of health and substantiated by the 1924-25 city directory. Galveston is recognized as the world's leading port in the export of cotton, sulphur, cottonseed cake and cottonseed products. It is the leading Gulf port in the export of grain and its exports for the year 1924 exceeded 27,429,582 bushels. Over 1,922,108 bales of cotton were exported from July 1, 1924 to November 30, 1924. The value of its exports and imports have increased from $550,000,000 in 1921 to over $614,191,976 in 1924.

The United States Government has spent over $20,000,000, and forty years of labor to develop the port of Galveston to its high standard of efficiency. Galveston is the port of quickest dispatch in the United States. The average car detention on export shipments through the port is 1½ days. The average detention of all cars export, coastwise and for local consumption, taken for a period of one year, is only three days.

Galveston's rail and port facilities are second to none, it being an uncommon incident for a vessel to dock in the morning and clear before midnight with an 8,000-ton cargo. The port holds the world's record for loading cotton in a ship, the Steamship Daniel Webster having loaded out 22,120 bales. The S.S. Tjibesar cleared for Rotterdam, Holland, with 496,000 bushels of grain, establishing another record for Galveston, as it was the largest cargo of grain ever cleared from a Gulf port. Its warehouses and concentration sheds offer facilities for storing 1,750,000 bales of cotton without resorting to tiering, and by tiering approximately 4,000,000 bales, or the entire annual output of Texas and Oklahoma.

The prominence of the port of Galveston has been due to its advantageous topographical location, for the loading docks and wharves are only 20 minutes from the Gulf, affording a direct water route to all markets of the world and to the four trunk line railroads which traverse the large section of the Middle West. It is also the Southern terminus of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, and Southern Pacific railroad systems.

Like other cities on the Gulf coast, Galveston lies in the path of tropical hurricanes originating in the Caribbean Sea, and to protect the city a seawall was constructed at a cost of over $5,000,000, and to give further protection the grade of the city was raised six feet at a cost of $4,000,000. The city is now safe from the menace of tropical storms and tidal waves coming from the Gulf.

NEW HOME PROGRESSES

Poor Richard Club Must Leave Camac Street in June

Rapid progress is being made in remodelling the interior of the new home of the Poor Richard Club at 1319 Locust street, Philadelphia, and it is expected alterations will be completed by August this year.

C. E. Brumbaugh, architect, promises one of the most unique clubs of its kind in the country.

The Yachtsmen's Club of Philadelphia will take possession of Poor Richard's Camac street home on June 1. Directors will announce shortly where members will meet for luncheons until the new home is ready for occupancy next August.

In Houston darkies will sing real old "down in the land of cotton" melodies.

THE observance of the One Hundred and Fiftieth Anniversary of American Independence at Philadelphia, June 1 - December 1, 1926, will be the celebration of, for and by all the people of the United States of America.

Philadelphia is the place for such an important celebration. It was there that the representatives of the Original Thirteen Colonies participated in the First and Second Continental Congresses, where the Declaration of Independence was adopted and proclaimed, and where the representatives from the Original States met, framed and adopted the Constitution of the United States.

Philadelphia not only invites the people of the United States, and of the world, to participate in next year's notable Anniversary, but especially wants the country's leaders in the Arts and Sciences, and in Industry and Business, to know and feel that the great Exposition which will be a crowning feature of the Celebration, is to be their Sesqui-centennial Exposition, and show to the entire world the great development made during the past one hundred and fifty years.

RANGER, PAST 1917 OIL BOOM FRENZY, NOW A SUBSTANTIAL CITY

By C. C. PATTERSON

THERE are few people in the civilized world who have not heard of Ranger, Tex. In October, 1917, the whole country was startled by the bringing in of the McCleskey well at Ranger. This was followed by a number of other wells, among which was the Norwood well. In a few months the total production of oil of the Ranger field reached the enormous total of 90,000 barrels daily. In a few months Ranger grew from a struggling country village of 600 people to a city of tents and shacks of some 30,000 population.

The emergence of the new present city of Ranger from the old shack town of the first years of the oil boom days is considered a marvel. What were shacks are now magnificent brick buildings. Beautiful homes are where hovels once stood. Six and one half miles of pavement have taken the place of streets one time impassable.

The new Ranger of today has a population of over 12,000 permanent citizens and a scholastic enrollment of two thousand pupils. It has one of the most beautiful high school buildings in the state, which cost the city over a quarter million dollars, and has all modern equipment. Ranger has also five modern brick ward school buildings, the cost from $50,000 to $75,000 each, making a total of almost one half million dollars invested in school buildings and school property. The schools of Ranger rank with the best in the state.

Ranger has a water system, sewer system and gas company, which is able to furnish an abundance of gas at a fair price, and also both a telephone and electric lighting system that is the equal, if not superior, to any city of its size in the south. The electricity for Ranger is furnished by the Oil Cities Electric Company, who have a very large investment in the Ranger field. The telephone system is the pride of the oil fields.

The banks and business houses are a credit to any city. The business people of Ranger are far above the average when it comes to progressive measures tending to better their community. Ranger has an active Chamber of Commerce with a large membership, working hard at all times to help develop Ranger into the coming industrial center of this part of the state, and a Retail Merchants' Association.

Ranger is the headquarters for a large number of the big oil companies and supply houses, as it is situated in the center of the oil, gas and casinghead gasoline plants. Statistics will show that Ranger is still "The Hub of the Oil Fields." In addition to the above oil, gas and gasoline industries, Ranger has many manufacturing plants, among which are, Southern Ice & Utilities Company, Banner Ice Cream Company, Standard Tank & Steel Works, Eureka Tool Company, Acme Pipe & Machine Company, Burden Equipment Company, K. C. Jones Milling Company, Texas Novelty Company, Bordeau Bros. Planing Mill, Clay Boiler & Machine Works, two of the largest rock crushers in the state and numerous other plants; also three wholesale grocery houses, a wholesale produce house, a potato chip factory, two bakeries, and a live daily paper, the Ranger Daily Times.

The territory surrounding Ranger is a rich and productive agriculture land. Among the farm products raised here are: corn, cotton, wheat, oats, milo maize, and other grains. Ranger is becoming famous as a poultry section, there being a number of large poultry ranches near the city which are growing rapidly. It has been found that berries, fruits, watermelons, cantaloupes, grapes, etc., can be grown very successfully without irrigation. The elevation of more than 1,400 feet gives Ranger an ideal all the year round climate.

Ranger is rapidly growing and is reaching out for industries, more good citizens and some things that will tend to make it an ideal place to build permanent homes. Ranger offers several natural advantages that make it a most ideal place in which to locate manufacturing plants. First as to railroad facilities: it is on the T. & P. and the W. F. R. & Ft. W. R. R. These lines have connection with a number of additional roads such as the Sante Fe, Katy, Frisco, Wichita Falls, Southern, Rock Island, H. & T. C. and many others.

Ranger is also on the main line of the Bankhead Highway with a hard surfaced road east and west from the city. The city owns the water system, including modern filtration plant, insuring an abundance of water for industrial purposes. It also has an abundance of cheap fuel in the way of electricity, coal, being adjacent to a well-developed soft coal field, and natural gas. The supply of gas from a large number of casinghead plants can be furnished for industrial purposes at a price which is astonishingly low.

Ranger has ample hospital facilities, and a number of doctors, lawyers, dentists, and other professional men. And ministers that are progressive, earnest, God-fearing men. The population of Ranger is made up of a metropolitan class of people. Practically every large city in the United States and Canada, and each state in the Union is represented. Ranger also has a Country Club, a tourist park and splendid golf links.

FUR TRADE AND MANY VARIED INDUSTRIES PROSPER CITY AND PORT OF ORANGE

By L. M. SHEPARDSON

ORANGE is in the extreme southeast corner of the state of Texas, the most northern and eastern port of the Texas Gulf coast, at the head of tide water on the Sabine river, which divides Louisiana and Texas, 100 miles slightly north of east of Galveston and Houston, on the Southern Pacific Railway and Gulf Coast lines, 268 miles west of New Orleans and on the intracoastal canal, which extends from New Orleans to this city.

The present city of Orange was originally settled about 1836, and was known as Green's Bluff. In 1856 the present name of Orange was adopted from the fact that there were large orange groves in this locality at that time.

The present population is approximately 15,000, 85 per cent being native whites, 10 per cent negroes, the balance foreign born.

Located in a splendid agricultural territory on two trunk line railroads and being a deep sea port with a trade territory extending 25 miles west and 150 miles north and east, Orange is a very important industrial center and fur market. More than one million dollars worth of furs were shipped out the past season. The principle industries are trapping, saw mills, box factory, paper mill, manufacturing kraft wrapping paper from yellow pine fiber, paper bag factory, creosoting and wood preserving plant, railway car building plant, iron and steel fabricating plant, ship yards, iron foundry, rice mill, small wood working plants and a very large electric power plant. There is also one of the largest and best oil fields of the Gulf coast country with a production of 20,000 barrels per day, and three other oil fields within a radius of 25 miles, insuring cheap fuel and power at all times.

Labor conditions are excellent. A peculiarly inviting climatic condition makes living at Orange comfortable and economical and insures a year-round operation of all industries. It also has splendid churches, schools, hotels, hospitals, good roads, efficient fire department, low insurance rate, cheap transportation, splendid rate adjustment, unlimited available sites on rail or water or both, and an unlimited supply of fresh water, for drinking and industrial purposes, from deep artesian wells, three banks with total resources of over $7,000,000, splendid homes, residential ownership prevailing, with a plentiful supply of modern rent houses at reasonable rates.

There are ample opportunities for recreation and sport, the finest hunting and fishing in the world in the immediate vicinity, with large country club, golf course, theaters, both moving picture and legitimate, play grounds, parks and tourist camp site.

The port of Orange is equipped with most modern of wharves and docks, municipally owned, insuring equal treatment to all, with 1,500 feet of wharfage with double railroad tracks and three large warehouses of modern construction protected by fire walls every one hundred feet, with a total covered area of 72,000 square feet and ample fire protection for all. These facilities are reached on equal terms by all railroads entering the city. For the handling of timber, there is no port in the United States better equipped with ample fresh water storage for hundreds of millions of feet, absolutely free from teredo, and without danger of oil stain due to pollution of the water, as is the case in many of the ports.

AUSTIN GROWS IN ATTRACTION FOR INTELLIGENT TRAVELERS

By W. E. LONG

THE wholesale territory of Austin covers a radius of approximately 150 miles. The retail territory covers from a 50 to a 75 mile radius. Within the wholesale radius there are 1,350,000 people. Within the retail radius there are 470,000 people. The people are 90 percent white, ten percent Negroes, and of the white population about 15 percent are of Swedish origin, 18 percent of German origin and the other 57 percent almost entirely of American origin, with a few Mexicans.

Agriculture is the leading industry. Cotton is the principal crop, together with considerable forage, corn, and some small grains. The fairly uniform seasons maintain a stable prosperity throughout the agricultural sections.

In the towns and cities many small industries thrive, with an occasional large plant. Austin has the Woodward Body Works, the largest truck body plant in the southwest; the Tips Engine Works, turning out the largest crude oil engines made in this section; the Walker Properties Association, the biggest plant in the world canning chile con carne and tamales; the Elgin-Butler Brick & Tile Works, and a considerable number of smaller plants which swell the value of manufactured products.

Austin—the state capital—and its citizenship, stand for the best to be found in cultural development. The many educational institutions located here—including the State University with more than 5,000 students—together with the fact that Austin has always been a center for writers, artists and diplomats has made it a very interesting city in which to live.

Austin has seven strong financial institutions with ample resources. The very best of motion picture theaters provide amusements. In addition to this the Amateur Choral Club brings to Austin each year much of the best talent, including those of national and international reputation.

The people of Austin and the surrounding territory live in comfortable homes, built principally of timber, interspersed with many buildngs of stucco, brick and rock.

The building of three new hotels in Austin in the last two years has opened up an entirely new territory for the tourist and as a result, thousands of travelers are stopping at this point, which possesses many features of historical and literary interest.

The circulation of Austin daily newspapers has increased from 7,000 to 23,000 subscribers in a period of less than two years.

SHERMAN, CITY OF FACTORIES AND COLLEGES, KEEPS BUSY AND COMFORTABLE

By LEE SIMMONS

VISITORS to the annual meeting of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, do you know of Sherman? If not, we invite you to visit and learn of this wonderful little city of factories and colleges.

With a population of only about 20,000, its 50 factories manufacture four times as much as any other southwestern city of the size. Twenty-nine wholesale houses make an important distributing center. Having five important railways, besides the Texas Electric Railway and four important designated highways and several hundred miles of hard surfaced road leading into Sherman, transportation facilities are all that could be desired.

Three strong banks with resources of $9,930,300 are amply able to take care of all legitimate requirements of business. Being located near the Oklahoma line and within fifty miles of the coal, gas and oil fields and having a sufficient supply of water and electric current, gives Sherman quite an advantage over most cities of Texas. Labor conditions are ideal and employers and employees work harmoniously together for mutual benefit. There is practically no foreign population.

The largest industry is milling, and Sherman is frequently called "The Minneapolis of the South." Four large flouring mills have a daily capacity of 4,100 barrels of flour and a combined capacity of 1,360,000 pounds of flour, meal and feed or 34 carloads daily. A large cotton oil refinery produces 1,200 carloads of shortening annually. In the largest garment plant in the Southwest, the 450 employees produce dress shirts, pants and overalls that are shipped practically to every state in the union. A large candy factory makes 100 kinds of candies, including package chocolates. The large gin and mill supply house covers two solid blocks, and is one of the largest industries of its kind in the South. The large iron works specialize on Diesel engine repairs and extra heavy work.

A $250,000 nursery, employing 175 people regularly, ships to 30 states and 3 foreign countries. An ice plant supplies 72 villages and towns and has 600,000 cubic feet of cold storage.

These with other factories, produce about $30,000,000 worth of products annually, not including a large volume of wholesale business.

Sherman-manufactured products are shipped to practically all the States, to 24 foreign countries, including every Continent and many islands of the seas. Being in the center of a rich black agricultural section, Sherman is the most important agricultural market in North Texas and Southern Oklahoma and is the home of two large pure seed industries.

Having adopted the city manager form of government in 1915, Sherman's financial affairs are in splendid condition and citizens are proud of their municipal owned water and light utilities and large park acreage. Paved streets, many handsome churches, public library, Y. M. C. A., two splendid sanitariums, well equipped tourist park, only community mausoleum in Texas, costing $150,000—these with six substantial colleges and an efficient public school system, together with many other sources of wealth, make Sherman an ideal city in which to live and do business.

Walter May Joins Portland Oregonian

Walter May of New York has been appointed executive news editor of the Portland Oregonian. The appointment was made by Edgar B. Piper, editor of the Oregonian while the latter was attending the publishers' convention in New York recently and was announced to the Oregonian staff in a teregram to R. G. Calvert, assistant managing editor. Mr. May has been employed in an executive capacity by William Zinsser & Co., New York paint dealers, and at part time on the New York Daily News. He has had newspaper experience in several cities among them Portland where he was some years ago assistant city editor of the Oregonian.

N. J. Levinson Seriously Ill

N. J. Levinson, editorial writer on the Portland (Ore.) Telegram and dean of Oregon newspaper men has been seriously ill following a sudden attack on May 2. After a blood transfusion operation he is somewhat improved.

No building in America has such big meaning to every soul under the Stars and Stripes as Independence Hall, with its treasured bell. Many thousands of patriots regularly visit this shrine of liberty to refresh the spirit of original Americanism. There is no finer piece of colonial architecture in the United States. It was built during the years 1732 to 1741, after the plans of Andrew Hamilton and was first occupied by the Provincial Assembly in October, 1735. Here the Secnod and succeeding Continental Congresses met, and here the Declaration of Independence was adopted July 4, 1776.

DALLAS NEWS BACKS BETTER FARMING CRUSADE IN ITS SECTION

"More Cotton on Fewer Acres" Is Slogan of Campaign Waged to Teach Farmers Value of Diversified Crops—Prizes Total $3,900

A "BETTER FARMING" crusade being conducted by the Dallas (Tex.) News was described to EDITOR & PUBLISHER by E. B. Doran, director of news and telegraph departments, who visited New York recently.

The crusade, in the form of a "More Cotton on Fewer Acres" contest, staged by the News in co-operation with the Semi-Weekly Farm News of Dallas and the extension service of Texas A. & M. College, has now entered its second year of a four-year agricultural program.

A total of $3,900 in prizes is offered this year, including a grand prize of $1,000 to whoever raises the most pounds of lint on five acres of unirrigated land. Last year 3,018 Texas farmers took part in the contest.

"Behind the 'More Cotton on Fewer Acres' contest," Mr. Doran said, "is the plan of bringing about a complete change in the agriculture of Texas through increased acre yields of cotton, thus decreasing the acreage planted to cotton on the average farm and releasing land from cotton for the growing of feed and food crops.

"For years Texas farmers have depended largely upon their cotton money to buy their feed, but this system is fallacious and it has been shown that no cotton farmer can hope to spend his cotton money for feed and food. Instead, his farm must produce these commodities and leave his cotton money a 'clean cash surplus.'

"The Texas cotton contest received the indorsement of the late Henry Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, the United States Department of Agriculture, the Federal Reserve Bank of the Eleventh District, the Texas Cotton Association, the Texas Bankers' Association, the Texas Farm Bureau Cotton Association, the railroads, Chambers of Commerce and other organizations.

"It stimulated such wide interest in better farming problems that fifty Chambers of Commerce in as many counties offered additional local prizes totaling $60,000 for farmers to engage in competitive cotton farming.

"The big element in the plan is that of competition. By offering prizes for highest acre yields farmers have been made to think about their production problems. They have learned that they can raise as much cotton on five acres as they frequently raise on twenty or forty acres, thus reducing expense, labor and time. The whole campaign will lead to a higher standard of living on Texas farms, we believe."

For 1925 a total of $3,900 in prizes are offered as follows:

One thousand dollars grand prize by the Dallas Morning News and Semi-Weekly Farm News to the Texas farmer who raises the most pounds of lint cotton on five acres of unirrigated land.

Five hundred dollars in four prizes—$200, $150, $100 and $50 for the most useful information contained in crop records kept by each entrant in the contest. The information which each farmer records at the end of the season is turned in to the above papers and becomes public property through its publication.

Two thousand, four hundred dollars contributed by the Dallas Cotton Exchange and the Texas Cotton Association in the following district prizes:

Five hundred dollars, first prize; $200, second prize, and $100, third prize for East, West and South Texas for cotton measuring not less than Government inch staple. This is to prevent the raising of too much short staple cotton of which there has been a dangerous tendency in recent years throughout the country.

"It is possible for the successful farmer to win the $1,000 grand prize, as well as the $500 district prize and possibly the best crop record prize, or a total of $1,700 for his effort on five acres," Mr. Doran declared. "Besides, he may win his local cotton contest prize, which in some counties is $1,000, provided he wins the state $1,000 prize.

"Already about 3,000 farmers have entered, which is just that number ahead of this time last year, since the 1924 contest was not launched until the middle of April.

"The states of Oklahoma, Arkansas and Mississippi have started similar cotton contests patterned after that of the Dallas Morning News and the Semi-Weekly Farm News and the idea is taking hold of bankers, business men and land owners who realize that something has been wrong with cotton production for some years. The 'More Cotton on Fewer Acres' contest is a common meeting ground for all kinds of people who are concerned in cotton or farming problems. Cotton being the major crop of Texas, its ills touch almost every individual's purse.

"The results of the 1924 cotton contest have been published in a bulletin entitled 'More Cotton on Fewer Acres,' which is being sent to all who apply for it. It is in demand by business institutions, banks and Chambers of Commerce and is used in the vocational agriculture courses in Texas schools to stimulate thought and action on the part of the coming generation of farmers.

"The four-year agricultural program subscribed to by the Dallas Morning News and the Semi-Weekly Farm News will include other crops, such as corn and feed, and eventually live stock, thus leading to a 'balanced' system of farming in Texas, making for greater wealth on the farms and in the cities dependent upon the farmers' prosperity."

OHIO CIRCULATORS MEET

Six New Members Added at Columbus Convention

Six new members were added to the roster of the Ohio Circulation Managers' Association at the seventeenth semi-annual meeting of that body in Columbus, O., April 29. President Charles S. Wilson, circulation manager of the Columbus Dispatch, presided at the sessions, which were held at the Chittenden Hotel. More than 20 members of the Association attended.

The six new members admitted to membership were: W. R. Rauck, Cincinnati Post; C. E. Snyder, Dayton Herald & Journal; J. W. Strange, Lima Gazette; Jake Killian, Martins Ferry Times; Russell Shaw, Coshocton Tribune; T. W. Campbell, Sandusky Star-Journal.

The meeting was addressed by Osmond C. Hooper, editor of the Ohio Newspaper and head of the department of Journalism at Ohio State University, on the need of cooperation between all departments of the modern newspaper. Mr. Hooper also talked of the work he was doing at the University in training future newspaper men.

The program was on the round table plan. No papers were prepared by the members.

The convention adjourned to meet in the same place, Wednesday, Oct. 28.

BRITISH DELEGATION, HOUSTON BOUND, ARRIVES IN NEW YORK MAY 5

Party of 25 Headed by Sir William Veno and Wynne Williams Bring Greetings from District 14— Entertained by New York Advertising Men

BEARING a Union Jack for presentation to their Houston hosts, a score of British advertising men reached New York, May 5, enroute to Texas and the 21st annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, May 9-14.

"We are glad of the opportunity to come to this country at this time in the spirit of friendship and goodwill and in the name of advertising, the greatest power for peace in the world," was the greeting to American advertising men given through EDITOR & PUBLISHER by the delegation, which, headed by Sir William Veno and Wynne Williams, advertisement manager of the London Times, arrived on the Cunarder Samaria.

The delegation was met at the dock by Jesse Neal, secretary of the A. A. C. W. and Clifford Jackson, secretary of the Advertising Club of New York, who welcomed them to this country on behalf of the Association and New York advertising men.

Before leaving with the New York and Philadelphia advertising men by special train for Houston, May 7, the British visitors were entertained by the Advertising Club of New York, May 6, with a special sightseeing and entertainment program arranged by the club's reception committee.

The English flag, which will be left behind, when the British delegation returns home following the convention, is a gift to the American hosts from District 14 of the A. A. C. W., which last year entertained nearly 2,000 American advertising men at the 20th annual advertising meeting held in London.

Sixteen advertising men, who with their wives and families and three advertising women, making up a group of 25, will represent District 14 at Houston. District 14, two years ago the smallest section of the Associated Advertising Clubs is now the largest group within the international organization in numerical strength. It comprises 45 advertising clubs, 33 of which are in England, five in France, four in Holland, one in Germany, one in Belgium, and one in Sweden.

Eight clubs are represented in the delegation. They are: the Advertising Club of Manchesteer, the Thirty Club, Publicity Club, Regent Club, and Aldwych Club of London, the Liverpool Advertising Club, the Publicity Club of Bradford, and the Publicitas Societas Anonyme Suisse de Publicitè. Henry George of Geneva, who represents the latter, is the only European delegate, who arrived with the group on the Samaria.

All clubs of District 14 are committed to vote for Philadelphia, as the city to hold the 1926 A. A. C. W. convention.

Wednesday was given over to entertainment of the British delegation in New York, beginning at shortly after nine o'clock in the morning and continuing until early morning May 7.

Sir William Veno, who Heads the British A. A. C. W. Party

Touring the city in private automobiles, the Englishmen visited among other places, the New York Stock Exchange, the Federal Reserve Bank, the Woolworth Building, Central Park, Columbia University, and Grant's Tomb. Luncheon and dinner were served at the Advertising Club of New York with tea at the new Theatre Guild Theatre. In the evening they were guests at the play "Louie 14th" at the Cosmopolitan Theatre, followed by supper at the Green Room Club.

Sir William Veno and Wynne Williams who head the British delegation have both had important careers in the British advertising world.

Sir William, until he sold his business, the Veno Drug Company, — several months ago, was one of the largest advertisers in Great Britain. From April, 1923 to March, 1924, the Veno Drug Company spent $1,600,000 in advertising. During the 26 years Sir William was owner, $18,000,000 was expended in advertising appropriations. The Veno Drug Company, largest British manufacturer of proprietary medicines, has its headquarters in Manchester.

Sir William, a freeman of the city of London, has also long been associated with the public life of Manchester, his native city. He is now chairman of the Altrincham division of the Conservative Association, British political organization. In 1924 he was elected Mayor of the Court Leet of Altrincham, founded by Edward I in 1292, and therefore one of the oldest governing bodies in Great Britain.

"I started seriously to advertise my business in a small way and with small capital, when I was 30 years old", Sir William declared in an interview with EDITOR & PUBLISHER. "My capital was, in fact, only $5,000.

"I had been associated practically all my life previously with doctors and chemists. Then I made a study of advertising, and decided it was the means to help me win my place in the sun. Advertising built up my business to be one of the largest in the country, and enabled me to sell it a short while ago for more than $3,000,000.

"Newspapers are the best of all advertising media", Sir William declared. "Our company always spent 80 per cent

Philadelphia's Welcome Is Hearty!

We know; we have just been welcomed and we want you to know about it.

Philadelphia advertisers welcomed us with contracts for more than 2,000,000 lines of advertising—and these contracts were all signed a week before the Philadelphia Daily News made its appearance on the street.

On March 31st, the date of our first issue, Philadelphia's welcome was so hearty that we were forced to omit over 15 columns of advertising.

Yesterday (this is written on April 1st), our pressmen worked to the point of exhaustion and as late as ten o'clock last night Philadelphia was crying for more copies of the Daily News.

We do not know what our circulation will be, for we haven't been able yet to print all the papers Philadelphia wants.

This is a sample of Philadelphia's welcome. 1926 is the year of the Sesqui-Centennial and a five star welcome awaits all visitors, especially the A. A. C. W.

Major Williams will act in Houston as the personal representative of C. Harold Vernon, chairman of District 14. He has been connected with the London Times since 1908, except during the war when he served with the British army from August, 1914 until the Armistice, winning his Major's rank when he was only 28. After the war, he spent several years in America as Lord Northcliffe's representative.

"The London convention of the advertising clubs was the greatest thing that has ever happened for advertising in Great Britain," Major Williams told EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

"It securely established the advertising club movement in Great Britain, and has given powerful impetus to the association's slogan 'Truth in Advertising'."

Both Sir William and Major Williams are scheduled to address sessions at the Houston convention. Harry Walter Wayne, of the Sales Managers Association of London, who also arrived on the Samaria, will be another convention speaker.

The complete list of British delegates follows:

Sir William Veno, Manchester, Veno Drug Company, Ltd.; Major Wynne Williams, London Times; G. R. Coates, Ambrose Wilson, Limited, and Guy's Tonic, Ltd., London, and Mrs. Coates; A. CIRCUS HAPPY, GETS AN "EXTRA" IN DES MOINES

Press Agents' Dream Realized When Council Allows Sunday Performance and Tribune-News "Extras"

Extras have been published by United States newspapers on everything from a rumor to the deaths of Presidents and the opening of wars, but it remained for three veteran newspaper men—one in the business and two out of it—to be responsible for the publishing of an extra on the showing of a circus in a city.

Press agents have dreamed of extras being published about their attractions, but it remained for Bill Buchanan, for years managing editor of the Des Moines (Ia.) Daily Capital, to see the fulfillment of this dream. His brother, Fred Buchanan, with whom he is associated in the management of Robbins Bros. Circus, and also a former newspaper man, has also dreamed the same dream, and he is now satisfied.

W. G. Hale, known throughout Iowa as "Bill" Hale, is now said to be the only living newspaper man who has ever got out a circus extra. Mr. Hale is associate managing editor and news editor of the Des Moines Evening Tribune-News. A combination of circumstances was responsible for the extra and also for the fact that the Associated Press, United Press and International News Service broadcast the circus story to the world.

Thirty days ago the Buchanans, who own the circus and winter at Granger, Ia., a short distance from Des Moines, entered into a contract to show in Des Moines under the auspices of the American Legion Post. They went before the city council and obtained permission to show April 26 and 27—opening the season. No one noticed the days until the one and two sheets and the advertisements were posted and carried in the newspapers. Then the Ministerial Association awakened and discovered that April 26 happened to be Sunday and the show was scheduled for that day. A special meeting was called by the association president, Dr. Herbert Scott, and the fight was on.

The ministers went before the city council and asked to have the Sunday permit rescinded. The Legion resisted this action. The city council debated and the newspapers carried front-page stories under eight-column head lines. The matter was continued until the next day.

For three days the fight waged bitter before the council. Finally, when the circus authorities agreed to show as a pageant, and not a circus, the ministers withdrew their protest and everything was lovely—for the circus.

When the city hall reporter flashed the news of the circus victory to the Evening Tribune office, "Bill" Hale got out the big type and the extra. Thousands of copies of the paper were sold—and the first circus extra was in the hands of the reading public.

Mr. Hale in an interview for EDITOR & PUBLISHER tells why he published the extra.

"The extra was put out not so much for the purpose of announcing the circus, but because the community was split and because of the elements for a good extra.

"Here the Ministerial Association, the American Legion and the city council were involved. Church people were constantly calling the office the three days before the matter was settled. They wanted to know what was going to happen. American Legion men did likewise. There wasn't a single person, I venture to say, who was not interested in the outcome of the fight. The city was divided. When the council refused to rescind permission for the circus to show, I decided the story was worth an extra. My judgment was vindicated, as the papers sold, and it was demonstrated there was an intensive interest in the decision of the council."

"Bill" Buchanan and his brother, Fred, were pleased with the decision, but much more exhilarated with the extra.

"We're the first showmen who have had their circus coming extraed," they say. "That is some accomplishment. During the fight we received front-page space and you know that is unusual in the circus game. We didn't have to fight for space."

A few weeks ago an old friend of the Buchanans—the wife of a prominent banker in Des Moines—was at the Granger winter quarters. Fred Buchanan was showing her, with her husband and other members of the party, through the menagerie. A jaguar ripped the clothing from her back and she was taken to the hospital.

The press agent didn't function in this case. Only by accident was it learned by Des Moines newspapers that a near tragedy had occurred. When the Buchanans were called to detail the story they refused to speak, and even requested that the story not be published.

Asks $50,000 in Libel Suit

Elmer F. Elston, county clerk, has filed suit for $50,000 damages against the Mattoon (Ill.) Daily Journal-Gazette, alleging defamation of his character and impugning his service as a county official.

FAME OF HOUSTON EDITORS SPREAD BEYOND TEXAS BOUNDARIES

Careers of Marcellus E. Foster of Houston Chronicle, W. P. Hobby, Post-Dispatch, and Charles J. Lilley of the Press Told NEWSPAPER executives of Houston have attained national prominence in many instances as a result of their progressive spirit and fighting qualities.

In and out of politics as state officials and as plain newspaper men, news of their achievements has spread far beyond the boundaries of Texas and beyond the nation's newspaper field.

They are Marcellus E. Foster, publisher of the Houston Chronicle, ex-Governor W. P. Hobby, president of the Houston Post-Dispatch, and Charles J. Lilley, editor of the Houston Press, a Scripps-Howard newspaper.

Mr. Foster, who has always fought against newspaper men entering politics, gained the sobriquet of "fighting Texas editor" because of the fearless crusade he conducted through his newspaper against the Ku Klux Klan which ended in victory in August, 1924.

Mr. Hobby believes that it is a duty of newspaper men to serve the public through political position when called. Both these men will play prominent parts in the entertainment of delegates to the 21st annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World in Houston next week. Their careers are well worth recording.

Mr. Foster, a peaceful man himself, has spent all his newspaper life in fights against public evils.

"Publicity is the greatest deterrent to evil in the world," he once declared in an interview with EDITOR & PUBLISHER. "Criminals who frequently don't dread the officers of the law or the courts shrink from newspaper publicity.

"The way to kill evil is to report it."

Mr. Hobby has built his reputation largely through his remarkable genius on the business side of newspapers. Asked once on what he based his success in the newspaper field principally, he replied simply, "By always doing the best I know how."

The development of Texas oil resources played a prominent part in the early newspaper careers of both these men. Both of them started work on the Houston Post, Mr. Foster as a reporter at $10 a week, Mr. Hobby as a general clerk in the subscription department at a salary of $8. Both advanced steadily until each had held the managing editorship of the paper. When he was about 30 years old Mr. Foster bought some oil lands "for a song" and made $5,000. With this sum as a nucleus he gathered together $25,000 and in October, 1901, started the Houston Chronicle in the midst of the Houston oil boom. Six years later while Mr. Hobby was still directing the Post's news staff the Beaumont (Tex.) Enterprise went into bankruptcy following excessive zeal in the early oil boom days. Mr. Hobby, with others, purchased the newspaper at the subsequent bankruptcy sale and put it on such a firm basis that by 1914 he was able to devote considerable attention to politics.

Success followed the initial steps of both men as independent newspaper owners. Mr. Hobby, elected lieutenant-governor in 1914, served three years and was then named governor. The Beaumont Enterprise prospered under his direction and he was able to acquire the Beaumont Journal, and consolidate the two newspapers under one management. Last August he became joint owner with R. S. Sterling of the Houston Post-Dispatch. Mr. Foster starting with only two typesetting machines and an old Cox duplex press, has built up the Houston Chronicle until today it has one of the finest newspaper plants in the South and assets of more than $2,000,000.

Mr. Lilley, editor of the Houston Press, was at one time city editor of the Cleveland Press, keystone newspaper of the Scripps-Howard group. From that position he became editor of the Norfolk (Va.) Post to be advanced from there to his present Houston position.

R. S. Sterling is publisher of the Houston Post-Dispatch. The editor is George M. Bailey. Other executives of that newspaper are: Charles C. Maes, managing editor; Paul Yates, city editor; R. L. Dudley, general manager and business manager, W. W. Pique, advertising manager, Harry Stewart, foreign advertising manager; C. B. Hogebaum, circulation manager; M. Schwartz, classined manager and Martin Briet, mechanical manager.

The Chronicle staff, under Mr. Foster, are: C. B. Gillespie, managing editor; M. E. Walter, city editor; G. J. Palmer, assistant general manager; Fred Fox, business manager; H. A. McCelvey, advertising manager; Steve Kelton, national advertising manager; E. C. White, circulation manager; Jake Butler, classified department; Harry Mellinger, mechanical department.

On the Press are the following executives, in addition to Mr. Lilley: Walter B. Lister, managing editor; Webb C. Artz, city editor; Ward C. Mayborn, general manager; John H. Payne, business manager; A. F. Butterfield, advertising and classified manager; A. G. Norment, national advertising manager; R. H. McCoy, circulation manager and Ed. L. Pulley, mechanical manager.

FLOWER TAKES BRAZIL POST

Succeeds M. N. Stiles, Who Will Join New York Staff

W. P. Flower, Jr., left New York this week to become Associated Press correspondent at Buenos Aires, replacing M. N. Stiles, who is returning to the United States, where he will probably serve on the South American desk in the New York office.

Mr. Flower has been on the South American desk in the New York A. P. headquarters for several years having previously been secretary attached to the United States legation at Buenos Aires. He began newspaper work on the New Orleans Item in 1908. At various times, before joining the Associated Press, he was connected with the Atlanta Georgian and the Little Rock Democrat.

Mr. Stiles was at one time New York city editor for the A. P. He will return from South America with his wife and daughter by way of Europe, visiting Madrid, Paris, Berlin and London.

Lynn Press Club Frolics

More than 2,000 persons attended the second annual ball and frolic of the Lynn (Mass.) Press Club, held last week at the New Ocean House, Swampscott. The proceeds went to the sick and death benefit fund of the club. An entertainment was given consisting of acts from Lynn and Boston theatres. A feature of the affair was the Press Club News, a 32-page tabloid paper, published especially for the occasion. A buffet supper was served during the evening. Daniel L. Moriarty, president, was general manager of the ball committee; Harold D. Valpey, chairman entertainment committee; Harvey L. Southward and Horatio H. Murphy, editors Press Club News; Clarence L. Moody, chairman ticket committee; Horace H. Atherton, chairman reception committee.

Editors Plan Summer Frolic

Editors of Minnesota and North Dakota will join in a summer frolic at Detroit, Minn., June 11-14, under the auspices of the Northern Minnesota Editorial Association. More than 600 editors are expected to attend.

MISSOURI PAPERS MERGED

Maryville Forum and Tribune Combined Effective May 4

A consolidation of the Maryville (Mo.) Forum and the Maryville Tribune became effective May 4. James Todd and Walter S. Todd of Maryville and W. C. Van Cleve of Moberly, Mo. are the owners of the new enterprise.

J. F. Full, formerly publisher of the Tribune, will devote his time to his duties as postmaster of Maryville.

The Tribune was founded in 1893 by Curtis Wray, formerly business manager of the St. Louis Times.

Wisconsin Newspaper Bill Defeated

A bill before the Wisconsin legislature to change the method of awarding printing contracts to the basis of circulation rather than the lowest bidder was defeated Friday by the senate. In opposition to the bill, a local newspaper and senators declared that it would stifle competition, that it would enable the common council of a city to "penalize the newspaper that exposes corruption and would destroy one of the principles of clean government—that of awarding municipal contracts to the lowest responsible bidder."

Michigan Advertising Law Invalid

Circuit Judge Fred W. Brennan, sitting in court at Flint, Mich., dismissed a case against Joseph Block, a Flint jeweler arrested on a charge of violating the State law prohibiting false advertising, and in doing so ruled that the law is insufficient and unconstitutional. Block had been convicted in justice court of violation of the law and had been fined $50, but appealed the case.

In ruling against the law on advertising Judge Brennan invited the prosecution to carry the case to the Supreme Court at Lansing.

CITY COUNCIL STARTS ITS OWN PAPER

Buffalo Officials Launch Daily Newspaper in Which to Print City Notices—One Subscriber on Books

As part of its economy program the Buffalo city council this week began publication of a daily newspaper, The City Record, in which to print its official notices.

The new daily began with a single subscriber, the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad appearing on the books, but 1,000 copies of the publication are being run.

A monthly subscription rate of 75 cents has been established. Single copies are to be sold for 3 cents.

The new publication has two columns to the page, 8 inches deep. The first issue was only of 6 pages but others will be of 4 pages only. The legal proceedings of the city including notices of hearings, adoption of ordinances and other matter of which publication notice must be given, make up the reading matter.

Heretofore competitive bids have been received from Buffalo newspapers for the publication of the city notices. The city council estimates it will save $30,000 to $40,000 on its annual appropriation of about $100,000 for this purpose. Several years ago the publication of a paper called The Legal Daily was undertaken and the city business was awarded to it. The Buffalo Commercial, which had former contracts, attacked the validity of such publication notice and forced a discontinuance of the paper.

Los Angeles Times

California's Great Newspaper

More news, reading matter and advertising than any other Pacific Coast newspaper.

Circulation 96% home delivered and 95% concentrated in the Los Angeles metropolitan market.

Leader in New York

The New York Times continues to publish a greater volume of advertising than any other New York newspaper. In four months this year The Times printed 9,052,696 agate lines of advertisements, an increase over the corresponding period of 1924 of 337,380 lines, an excess over the next New York newspaper of 3,569,500 lines, and more than the combined volume of four New York evening newspapers.

This large volume of advertising in The New York Times was attained despite the censorship which excluded thousands of lines of advertisements, protecting the columns of The Times from those who misrepresent, raise false hopes and spread nets to catch the unwary.

All Newspaper Circulation Is Mass Circulation

There is an element of humor in the fact that when a newspaper does not enjoy circulation leadership, it is often the case that it launches a brave claim to have "quality" circulation.

When a political candidate loses an election, does that prove that the loser is the better man? When a horse loses a horse-race, does that prove he is the better horse? Only in the solicitation of newspaper advertising does "number two" or "number three" or "number four" claim "quality" and demand preference.

As Charles Austin Bates says: "If you take the circulation of any successful newspaper in any community in the Unites States and analyze it, you will have a fairly accurate cross-section of the population of that community. . . . . This thing we call 'quality circulation' is, and must be, continuously elusive; and it may be completely illusive as well."

Akron's Happy Marriage

On March 16, 1925, The Akron Press purchased the Akron Times, the new, consolidated paper being named The Akron Times-Press.

The two papers were of similar editorial style and policy and the new Times-Press is meeting with enthusiastic commendation by former readers of both papers.

All the editorial features of both papers have been retained. Nothing has been abandoned nor omitted. Even the reportorial staffs have been combined. Thus is logically made a mighty newspaper —complete in every detail—one of the finest newspapers published anywhere.

Net paid circulation exceeds 40,000

The union of these two large reader-groups has resulted in a circulation exceeding 40,000 which, at the present rate is particularly attractive to national advertisers entering this market.

JOURNALISM FEAST SPREAD FOR EDITORS AND STUDENTS AT U. OF MISSOURI

Sixteenth Annual Journalism Week Dedicated to Class of 1915—Attended by Noted Newspaper Men of the Nation—Modern Press Problems Discussed in Varied Program of Speeches

By DAVID RESNICK

COLUMBIA, MO., May 5.—Men and women from every section of the United States and engaged in every phase of newspaper and magazine editing, advertising, literature and pertinent fields are feasting here this week on a varied menu of speeches—so varied a menu in fact that there are enough divergent courses to assure satisfaction of the entire wide and representative range of intellectual palates in attendance for the Sixteenth Annual Journalism week of the University of Missouri.

Nor is the feast confined only to words. Every few hours the figure of speech ceases and the word resumes its literal meaning. Breakfasts, luncheons, teas, banquets and other occasions are excuses for eating as the guest of some journalistic fraternity or sorority or other organization.

Approximately 300 visitors are attending the meetings.

Some of the arrivals for Journalism Week were strangers, but most were not. A large number were enthusiastic and apparently prosperous alumni and former students whose hearts quickened at the sight of their venerable Dean Walter Williams.

Although Journalism Week usually serves as a reunion for as many former students as manage to get away from their city desks, copy desks, and "just desks" for the event, a tradition is being created which insists that each Journalism Week shall particularly commemorate the achievements of those who were graduated or scheduled to graduate exactly ten years previous. So this year's Journalism Week, in a sense, is dedicated to the journalism school class of 1915. In addition, Kappa Tau Alpha, honorary journalism fraternity celebrated the 15th anniversary of its founding of the first chapter at this school by initiating Marcellus Elliott Foster, president and general manager of the Houston (Tex.) Chronicle, and Mrs. Lois K. Mayes, former editor and publisher of the Pensacola (Fla.) Journal, as honorary members at a banquet Tuesday evening. O. O. McIntyre, native of Plattsburg, Mo., but better known for his syndicated column of New Oork oddities who was to have been initiated was forced to remain in New York on account of illness. He sent personal greetings.

The first day's sessions were held as open meetings of the Missouri Writers' Guild, with acting President James W. Earp of Kansas City presiding. Subjects discussed included such things as how to write different types of short stories and where to sell them, the attitude of contemporary novelists, opportunities for free lance writers, markets for selling poetry and what the field of magazines devoted to children holds forth for journalists.

Officers for the coming year elected by the Guild are Mrs. Mary Blake Woodson of Kansas City, president; J. Breckenridge Ellis of Plattsburg, vice-president; Mrs. Myrtle Jameson Trachsell of St. Joseph, second vice-president; P. Caster Harvey of Liberty, secretary-treasurer.

Rumblings of "On to Houston" cries are heard here as a large share of the advertising men in attendance make preparations to go directly to the great advertising convention to be held in that city next week.

That syndicates take the "punch" out of cartoons was the accusation made by Roy H. James, cartoonist for the St. Louis Star in an address on "The Cartoon and the Newspaper." Tuesday.

"The syndicate idea has seriously affected the development of the editorial cartoon since it has led the cartoonist into generalities," James declared.

Cartoonists are like actors except for the difference that they do not work in the spotlight, he said, the public being more interested in their signatures than in their personal appearance. James explained he is of the editorial cartoonist type whose method is to keep the cartoon simple, using only a few labels and a caption and letting the picture put the message across.

Emphasis upon the importance of the part being played and the still greater part that will be played by radio in the newspaper business featured an address on "The Free Lance Writer and His Opportunities," by Edward B. Garnett, editor of the Kansas City Star Magazine.

"Radio is becoming more and more the ally of newspapers and writers and conditions are changing daily," he explained. Garnett predicted there may be a time when it will be nothing unusual for the writer to radio his story to the editor who wants it in a hurry.

"It is my long cherished ambition to publish a newspaper some day with a staff of women exclusively," observed Mrs. Lois K. Mayes, former editor and publisher of the Pensacola (Fla.) Journal, telling of "Some Opportunities Presented to Women in a Newspaper Office." There were always at least half a dozen women on the staff of her Florida publication, she said.

An intimate picture of "Reporting At the State Capital" was given by Robert E. Holloway, Jefferson City correspondent of the Kansas City Journal-Post and St. Louis Times.

Dangers to humanity that might arise from unregulated world wide radio telegraphy and broadcasting were stressed by Walter Stowell Rogers of New York, American member of World Conference on International Communications in a speech on "International News Communication." He urged agreement among nations to insure prevention of utlization of broadcasting for selfish motives. He cited illustrations how national propaganda might be provocative of trouble and declared the peace of the world would be menaced without international regulation of radio.

"A justification of international radio" he pointed out, "would be of great import to the newspaper world not only as it might affect press rates but because of the effect it might have on the collection and distribution of news."

CRITICS OF PRESS PERFORM WHOLESOME SERVICE, SAYS ELBERT H. BAKER

CRITICS of newspapers perform a wholesome service for the press, Elbert H. Baker, president of the Cleveland Plain Dealer declared during the course of an address this week at the Sixteenth Annual Journalism Week of the University of Missouri.

"As I look over the newspaper field from time to time I seem to find the public's estimate of the newspaper falling into three lines: the great majority who cordially believe in and depend upon their favorite newspaper; others who are vocal in condemnation of all newspapers, including their makers, and still others who merely tolerate the newspaper they happen to buy," he said.

"I rejoice greatly in our friends, but after an experience of nearly 50 years in the newspaper business I am inclined to agree most heartily with the view recently expressed by one of my associates:

" 'Blessed be the critics of our newspapers.'

"Their name is legion and whether constructive or merely destructive, it is a wholesome rebuke to the pride which goeth before a fall or to that smug self satisfaction which is an effectual bar to progress.

"There are many, either as individuals or in groups, who attack the newspaper. Some of them merely by innuendo, others by direct and specific charges. I sometimes wonder whether such persons realize just what they are doing. It is not the newspaper itself that suffers most. No sound newspaper is day by day crying wolf, but there comes a day of crisis, when it is of vital importance that the one outstanding voice of public opinion, the newspaper, shall speak in no uncertain tone and that its force shall not be abated one whit through doubts as to its motive, its honesty or its sincerity.

"There are those who charge us with venality, that we have sold ourselves body and soul to the advertiser; that we are in his power and must from the very nature of the case be controlled by him. I do not say for a moment that such a thing never happened, but by and large it is absolutely untrue.

"They point to the large volume of advertising carried by the worth-while newspaper as conclusive evidence. The facts are that the great department store is under insistent pressure each and every day to use to the full the newspapers that will move seasonable merchandise that in a few days may pass the peak of value and that will help to reach a maximum of turnovers in the twelve months. If the newspaper is serving its community ably and well; if it is following the rule of common sense and common every day honesty in dealing with local, state and national questions, it will deserve and hold the respect and good will of its community and all this will be evidenced by a large and growing circulation. It will be more a question of the space available to the advertiser than of the rate. Questions of politics, race or religion do not enter."

Mr. Baker then traced the growth of newspaper publishing from the days of personal journalism to the present time and had the following to say regarding the aims and ideals of modern newspapers:

"What we should all strive for in our making of newspapers is a sound point of view. If we have the will to be just and fair in all things and can bring to this great work a clearness of vision, untiring energy, patience and persistence, we have some right at least to expect that success will crown our efforts.

"We are all pushed to the limit of our powers in our effort to lead or at least to keep up with the constantly accelerating pace of the achievements of man in every field of endeavor. From the pitifully narrow field of bitter partisanship and personal journalism, we have by steps, halting at times and painful, evolved a new and fairer point of view, with its broader outlook upon the world and upon the acts and the rights and the needs of our fellowmen. With it all has come a virtual recreation of all our ideas of newspaper making. I sometimes think that in the lust of the chase we ofttimes follow strange gods and that the end may find us in sack cloth and ashes.

"When I watch at a newsstand, as I often do, to see what men and women, boys and girls, buy, I am amazed to find the size of the armful of wildly exciting adventure and raw sex stuff carried away, not only by the men and boys, but by women of uncertain age and girls in their teens. It certainly makes one pause.

"Fortunately for the well meaning and right thinking newspaper, this craze goes in cycles and at its worst is only one manifestation of our complex civilization.

New Up-Town Home for EDITOR & PUBLISHER

NEXT week EDITOR & PUBLISHER will move into its new headquarters office, located on the 17th and 18th floors of New York Times Building, at Times Square, 42nd Street and Broadway, much more commodious and in that sense more convenient than the old offices where this newspaper has been published for more than ten years.

Arrangements have been made to accommodate the friends of EDITOR & PUBLISHER when they visit New York—there are desks, secretarial service, theatre ticket service, telephones and such office conveniences available and very welcome. Not only in location but in appointments our new offices will, we believe, be considered extraordinarily interesting and practical.

FOSTER SCORES SUPPRESSION OF CRIME NEWS

It Does More Harm Than Good, Editor and Publisher of Houston Chronicle Tells Journalism Week Gathering—Declares Criminals Fear Press Publicity Given Their Deeds

MORE harm is done in suppressing crime news than in printing it, Marcellus E. Foster, editor and publisher of the Houston (Tex.) Chronicle told editors and students gathered for the Sixteenth Annual Journalism Week of the University of Missouri School of Journalism in an address Tuesday evening May 5.

Mr. Foster's discussion of crime news occupied a major portion of a talk on "Journalism as Public Service."

Following, in part, is the text of his address:

The longer I live, the more do I realize there is nothing new under the sun, so far as thought is concerned.

For the guidance of a great, modern newspaper, published in this wonderful twentieth century of glory and grandeur, peace and plentitude, I recommend five short texts, all from the old Testament, and will endeavor to utter a few thoughts in connection therewith, not hoping to improve upon them, but trusting that I may be able to show why they apply to newspapers and their readers, of this day and time, centuries after they were uttered, thousands of years after they first appeared in type. They are:

"Precept must be upon precept, precept must be upon precept: line upon line, line upon line; here a little and there a little.

"A word spoken in due season—how good it is."

"Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil."

"Tell it not in Gath; publish it not in the streets of Askelon."

"As water is spilled upon the ground which cannot be gathered up again."

Now for my first text:

"Precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, there a little."

Has there ever been anything said in all the speeches made by man and all the columns written, so clearly and concisely defining the modern daily newspaper? May I interpolate here that I love and honor the profession of which I am an humble member? No one who does not love his work should ever enter this great field of activity. Love tells the whole story of every successful business. I pity the man who does not go to his daily task with love in his heart.

I love everything connected with a newspaper. The hum of the typesetting machines is an inspiration to me; the sight of a busy editorial room with the reporters digging out stories on the typewriters sends a thrill to my heart; then when I go to the basement and hear the roar of the great presses sending forth printed pages, I get another exhilaration.

The newspaper is a daily renewal of faith: a constant source of enthusiasm and inspiration. I love it! I glory in it!

Tell the story, tell it truthfully. Tell of the things that others fail to see; give it light. Give the world encouragement; give it amusement; give it entertainment. Look behind the scenes; see what there is back of the stories of graft and corruption. Warn your readers of something they may not have grasped from the telegraph messages or the reporter's simple statement of facts. Love your work, but above all love your fellow man. Serve your newspaper by serving mankind.

"A word spoken in due season—how good it is."

I sometimes wonder if the world knows how easy it is for a newspaper not to speak a word in due season. To turn our backs or to look the other way is so natural. Why should we of the newspaper profession look beneath the surface, interpret the meaning, dissect the story, or lay bare the facts behind it all? Is that a necessary part of our duty? Couldn't we perform our mission by merely printing the news and leaving it to our readers to draw their own conclusions? Not if you love your work or honor your profession. We cannot turn aside when the problems of city, state and nation confront us. We cannot ignore the evils that exist, or carry messages only of peace, goodness, contentment or smirking self-satisfaction.

Recently we have been told that the daily press prints too much crime news, and it seems to me in recent years that terrible crimes have been too much exploited. And yet we have our jails, our penitentiaries, our homes for deserted children, our numerous charities to relieve the charity stricken, the infirm and the aged. We spend millions to prevent crime; to catch criminals to punish them; to imprison; to kill by law. We have more guards, detectives, and policemen in this country than any nation on earth. We have more laws against crime and we have more criminals.

Do you know how much this nation spends annually on crime or as a result of crime? Untold millions. Of every dollar you pay in taxes 25 cents is because of some form of criminality. It is partly for prevention, partly punishment and partly the hope of eradicating evil. it is partly to relieve the distress of those who are in poverty, sickness or degredation due to man's crime or neglect.

Yes, newspapers should print crime news; they must print it. Nearly all literature that lives has recognized it. What great plays are still presented before the world, hundreds of years after they were written? The tragedies of Shakespeare: Hamlet, Macbeth, King Lear, Julius Caesar, King Henry IV. The novels of Dickens are in every home that pretends to have a library, and yet what greater stories of crime are there than those written by that great Englishman? Nicholas Nickleby is a story of poverty, of crime, of brutality, as well as a story of beauty and encouragement. Oliver Twist furnishes us with criminal characters that have become historic.

What about the Bible? It starts with temptation and evil in the Garden of Eden. It describes the son of Adam killing that son's brother; it tells of old Noah getting drunk, of the thousand wives of Solomon, and there is nothing more graphic that has ever been printed by a newspaper than the story of the death of Absalom and the crimes that led up to it. Debauchery of sister by brother, murder of brother by brother; war of son upon father; the terrible death of the son while fleeing from a father's wrath.

Should the daily newspaper print stories of crime? Yes. Why? Let me tell you first a story that I once read in a volume written by Ruskin. He pictures a great banquet. There are assembled beautiful ladies and men of fame. It is a gay party. The hall is beautiful, the ladies are in beautiful attire; there are silks and satins; the banquet board is graced with everything than money can buy. It shines with cut glass and silver; there are glasses of bubbling champagne. Suddenly the walls of that banquet hall are made to fall apart and the gay banqueters are left there at the table, looking out over the world. There come trooping before them the crimes of the earth—poverty, disease and distress. Murderers do their fiendish acts in the presence of those who have just banqueted. Mothers half-starved appear before them with hollow breasts; babes, wan, sick and lacking nourishment are seen. For one night, these people who had no thought of the world on the outside are made to see it. They realize that crime does exist; that evil and poverty are in the world; that pestilence and famine, murder and sudden death are just around the corner.

That is what the modern newspaper must do. Crime exists; evil exists, and we must tell it. We must tear down the walls that hide the disease, the criminality and the poverty of the world. But how must do it? One of my texts tells you better than I could if I wrote a volume. "Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil."

I mentioned a few minutes ago that Dickens tells many stories of many crimes, but how does that great novelist portray them? Do his novels make any living, normal man desire to become a criminal? No! a thousand times no! After you have finished, you shudder at the thought of such creatures being on earth. You are saddened and sickened. You realize that you must teach your children and your neighbors' children to avoid evil associates. You tell them that crime is always punished, if not on this earth, then in the hereafter.

Also remember that while there are stories of crime in the Bible, they are always told in a manner to warn and that there are far more beautiful stores of goodness in that great book than those of evil. It tells the wonderful story of creation; it tells how beautiful is this old world as created by our great Father; that it comprises poetry, sculpture, painting and the brotherhood of man. When God created the world, that was poetry—beautiful motion, expression, rhythm. He formed the world of dry land, of the waters of the sea, of lakes, and of mountains; that was sculpture. Then he colored it with vast plains, mammoth forests, green grasses, the blue of the waters—that was painting. Then there was the greatest drama of all—the human being—and it is to the descendants of that man now on earth to whom the newspapers must carry their messages. We must give them stories of the beautiful things of life; inspiring thoughts and of high ideals, while we are putting in print the stories of evil that men do. We must portray goodness as well as tell the bad, which cannot be ended by trying to hide it from our sight.

Yes, we must and should print stories of crime, but let us always do it in a way that turns us from crime, not toward it. Let us show the terror and horror of it, and that punishment must follow.

Woe unto the newspaper that makes crime seem attractive; woe unto the editor who dares not expose and denounce crime.

That is the text which causes more trouble in the newspaper business than publishing stories of crime.

I contend that more harm is done by suppressing crime news than by printing it. The requests not to tell the story worry our profession more than the actual publication, and if a newspaper listened to the hundreds of pleas not to print, the world would suffer far more than it does through the actual knowledge of crime.

How often does the telephone ring in a newspaper office with this request, "Can't you leave my name out?"

What is it that the criminal fears more than all else? The political grafter, the man who has defrauded the government, the woman who has slipped across from Europe with hidden jewels, endeavoring to escape the payment of duty? What does he or she first say? "Keep my name out of the paper." They frequently fear neither the law nor the courts. They can employ high-priced lawyers; they can often delay punishment or buy immunity, but they can't keep their names out of the paper.

Just a few months ago a well-known woman in New York, a leader in society and in charitable work, was caught as she was leaving a great steamer reaching this country from Europe, with an array of beautiful gems hidden in her dress, which she had smuggled through. Her lawyers hurried to the newspaper offices, requesting that the story be not told. They pleaded; they tried to bribe. She was not sorry for her crime, and had no fear of anything on earth except publicity. "Keep it out of the papers" was her cry. Thank God I can say to the honor of our New York newspaper men, that her name was published; the story was told. Did it do harm? No; it did good, for it warned others that their crimes could not be hidden.

And I here become a little personal and tell you a story of how crime in Texas sought to hide itself and how it thrived and increased until the criminals were exposed in the daily papers.

When a great secret organization invaded our state, selling bed sheets hate and fanaticism, the men behind it thought they were all-powerful. They were taking the law into their own hands; they spied upon their neighbors; they took poor devils from their homes and from the streets and punished them for alleged evil; for doing things that were frowned upon by these saintly representatives of an "invisible empire." Men were cruelly beaten and maimed; shrinking women were taken from their homes in the dead of the night and carried blindfolded to lonely spots. These creatures calling themselves men stripped women and poured hot tar on their naked bodies, covered them with feathers, hacked the hair off their heads and then carried them back to town, throwing them in the streets as horrible examples of what would happen to anyone who was accused by the great cyclops, the titans, the terrors or the invisible eye. All this happened in civilized communities in Texas. Men were stricken with terror; people talked in whispers to each other. This order had brought into its ranks officers of the law, police chiefs, sheriffs and even judges of our courts. They defied all law; they snapped their fingers at the constitution and the rights of others. But they had forgotten one thing—the press. Yet I must admit to the shame of our profession that many newspapers failed to denounce the new evil. It was an intimidating, boycotting and seemingly all-powerful organization. Many editors looked the other way. They pretended it was just a passing frenzy, and that to denounce it would only increase the membership. That was one time when some members of our profession believed that the way to suppress crime was to ignore it, but praise the Lord, there were a few of us who thought that the way to stop evil was to tell about it; to expose it.

DAILY ENTERS RADIO ADVERTISING FIELD

St. Louis Post-Dispatch Now Selling Space on the Air to Advertisers Through National Advertising Department and Finds It Good Business—Details of Plan Told

By ROY M. EDMONDS

FOR the first time in the history of radio broadcasting, a newspaper, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, is using its broadcasting station as an advertising medium, selling courtesy programs over its station, KSD. The plan has been in operation for several weeks, and is in the nature of an experiment. So far, the broadcasting has proven satisfactory to the newspaper and to the advertisers, and, of greatest importance, to the public.

The plan of meeting the demand for this new form of advertising was evolved by George M. Burbach, advertising manager of the Post-Dispatch. Radio advertising is being recognized as a force and advertisers are more and more including sums for broadcasting programs in their appropriations.

Why shouldn't newspapers go after this class of advertising, especially those with broadcasting stations with an established reputation for giving fine programs, such as KSD has had, Mr. Burbach felt.

After establishing a rate card and contract with provisions to safeguard the programs from purely advertising talks and to keep up the high standards already established by the station, Mr. Burbach placed the actual selling in the hands of the national advertising department. One salesman started out, and without much difficulty signed up five advertisers who are now having regular programs.

The rate card, under which the usual agency commission on national advertising is allowed, calls for both daylight and evening broadcasting.

Daylight broadcasting is from 10 a. m. to 6 p. m. The open rate for half-hour periods each day except Sunday is $500 per week, or $300 per week on a six-months' contract. The open rate for home hour talks of fifteen minutes from 4 p. m. to 5 p. m. Tuesday or Thursday is $100 per period, or $50 per period on a six-months' contract.

For evening broadcasting the following rates apply: Between the hours of 6 p. m. and 8 p. m., open rate, $250 per hour, six months' contract, $200 per hour; between the hours of 8 p. m. and 11 p. m., open rate, $400 per hour; six months' contract, $300 per hour; between the hours of 11 p. m. and 1 a. m., $200 per hour; six months' contract, $150 per hour.

The prices for the afternoon broadcasting programs do not include the furnishing of any programs or talent by KSD, and usually consists of educational talks.

The evening rates include the cost of any of the following musical programs to be furnished by the program director of KSD:

1. Classical or semi-classical programs by a string quintette.
2. Popular or semi-classical program by four-piece concert orchestra and two singers.
3. Musical program by male quartette and pianist.
4. Musical program of quartette and solo numbers by mixed quartette and pianist.
5. Dance program by six-piece jazz orchestra.

Additional artists can be included at slightly increased rates.

Where programs are to be broadcast from any other place than the KSD studio in the Post-Dispatch building, there is an additional charge of $35 for the first hour and $10 for each additional consecutive hour.

In evening broadcasting one talk of not more than 10 minutes is permitted in each hour program if desired. But all talks whether made in the afternoon or evening must be made from manuscript and submitted for approval.

"This precaution is taken," said Mr. Burbach, "so that the talks will not smack of advertising and that there may be nothing objectionable in them."

The absolute control of all programs is vested in the Post-Dispatch, as will be noted in the radio broadcasting regulations, which are made a part of the contract. The regulations, which provide that all broadcasting programs, of every description, are subject to the approval of the Pulitzer Publishing Company, publishers of the Post-Dispatch, without objection or liability follows:

"This contract is for the exclusive broadcasting of the firm mentioned and cannot be used by two or more firms.

"Broadcasting periods or programs are not subject to change or cancellation, except with the consent of the Pulitzer Publishing Company and as hereinafter provided.

"All broadcasting programs, of every description, are subject to the approval, and censorship, of the Pulitzer Publishing Company without objection or liability. The user agrees to submit to an authorized representative of the Pulitzer Publishing Company his entire program in detail for approval. All addresses to be submitted in manuscript form. It is agreed that all announcements will be made by and under the supervision of the announcer of the Pulitzer Publishing Company.

"The Pulitzer Publishing Company reserves the right to cancel this contract upon twenty-four (24) hours notice in writing to the user without liability, and to cancel or change broadcasting periods or programs, or any part thereof, as it sees fit.

"The Pulitzer Publishing Company does not assume any financial responsibility or damages for losses sustained in any way, as a result of statements made over Station KSD, nor for injuries or accidents to performers or the employes of the user, while on the premises of the Pulitzer Publishing Company, and the user agrees to save the Pulitzer Publishing Company harmless from any damage or losses sustained by it as a result thereof.

"The Pulitzer Publishing Company will not be responsible for the loss of valuables or property of the user or his representatives or employes, while on the premises.

"In the event the broadcasting period contracted for is not used the Pulitzer Publishing Company reserves the right to provide a program at the expense of the user or to make it a silent period and collect the full amount contracted for.

"Where remote control programs are broadcast the user agrees to pay all expenses necessary including the charges of the telephone company.

"The Pulitzer Publishing Company reserves the right to collect for broadcasting, as per contract, at any time it deems advisable.

"The Pulitzer Publishing Company will not be responsible for verbal agreements of any kind made with or by its representatives."

The agreement made by the Post-Dispatch, as will be noticed is different from that made by the American Telegraph and Telephone Company, and its associates in that the newspaper, and not the advertiser, supplies the entertainment program.

"This is done," said Mr. Burbach, "because of a desire to control the character of the entertainment, to insure its being of a high standard."

The contract advertisers for daylight broadcasting are the Laclede Gas Light Company, who are giving a series of home hour talks on home economics, and Lane-Bryant, a New York institution catering to stout women, who have been conducting a series of talks on "Slenderizing Apparel," in a tie-up with newspaper advertising of the new store opened in St. Louis. The radio talks preceded the opening of the store by several weeks.

The first of the national advertisers to use the evening broadcasting was the Gardner Motor Car Company, the programs being by the Gardner eight-in-line entertainers. The National Bank of Commerce and the Colin B. Kennedy Radio Corporation, manufacturers of receiving sets, were next.

The D'Arcy Advertising Company which handles the Gardner account, is tying up with the broadcasting by sending out 100,000 attractive colored posters to their agencies all over the country. These posters announcing the weekly broadcasting are to be displayed in windows of the Gardner agencies and other prominent places. In addition thousands of small stickers for other advertising matter are being distributed.

The National Bank of Commerce, through Walter B. Weisenburger, vice-president in charge of advertising, has sent similar four-colored posters to all of its correspondent banks, several thousand in number throughout the Middle West and Southwest.

The Anfenger Advertising Company, which handles the Kennedy account, is preparing the neccessary tie-up to the broadcasting programs of their clients.

"Are the programs listened to?", is one of the questions that arises in connection with the plan of the Post-Dispatch.

"Yes," say the public which has sent hundreds of commendatory letters direct and through the broadcasting station to advertisers.

"The results so far are satisfactory, to the advertiser and the agency, and one of our advertisers who placed a six months' contract is already talking of renewing it on the same basis," said Mr. Burbach. Because it is an experiment, contracts are limited for the present to six months, although the Post-Dispatch reserves the right to cancel the contract on 24-hours notice.

The Post-Dispatch has consistently refused to enter into any agreement with any other broadcasting advertising stations, awaiting the time when it could do so on its own account. Mr. Burbach expressed himself as pleased with the progress that has been made by KSD in the sale of "courtesy programs."

"Would you recommend the plan to other newspapers operating broadcasting stations," Mr. Burbach was asked.

"Most assuredly, I would," he replied. "Our experience shows that business is to be had. We feel too, that we are rendering a service. We are giving the public high-grade programs, and we are giving advertisers an opportunity to use this new medium.

"The one great danger, as I see it, is that the programs may be tainted with too much advertising. There is too much of a temptation for advertisers to get away from entertainment and instruction in their programs and to inject pure advertising into it. This is resented by listeners, and the reaction to the station and the advertiser is bad. We believe we have solved this by control of the programs. The advertising feature will not in any way interfere with our regular programs."

The wave length of station KSD, is 545.1 meters.

HERBERT HOOVER PRINCIPAL SPEAKER AT FIRST CONVENTION SESSION

HERBERT HOOVER, Secretary of Commerce, will make the principal address at the opening of the business sessions at the 21st annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World in Houston, May 11, A. A. C. W. headquarters announced this week.

Hon. Herbert Hoover

The subject of his speech will be "The Influence of Advertising on Distribution."

Secretary Hoover during the past year has paid considerable attention to distribution problems. At his request the recent Conference on Distribution was held in Washington where means of eliminating waste were discussed. As a result of the conference various committees are at present being organized to make careful study of the distribution question and make detailed reports of their findings later.

In addition to his own address, Secretary Hoover will read a message to advertising men attending the convention from President Coolidge.

Another cabinet member on the convention program is Secretary of Agriculture W. M. Jardine.

The addresses will be broadcast by the Houston Post-Dispatch which recently installed a new 500-watt station.

Secretary Hoover, it is understood, will follow the brief addresses of welcome and reply to be made by Governor M. A. Ferguson of Texas, Mayor Holcombe of Houston, Lou Holland, A. A. C. W. president, and Wynne Williams, advertisement director of the London Times, representing the British delegation.

"BOB" CORNELL STAGED HOUSTON SHOW

Executive Secretary Promises Warm Welcome to Thousands and Entertainment They Will Not Forget

By John L. De Brueys,
Assistant Secretary, Houston Convention Executive Council

TIME, March 31, 1925. Place, headquarters of executive secretary, R. H. Cornell, fifth floor, Chamber of Commerce Building, Houston, Texas. Cast of characters, entire 112 committees, all taking leading parts in shaping final details of the greatest event in the history of Houston.

Scenes range from the new city auditorium, which has been rebuilt at a cost of $400,000.00, for the specific purpose of furnishing all the necessary departmental session quarters for the A. A. C. W. and to assure a gross seating capacity to accommodate 7,500 people, with acoustics and stage effects which makes this great gathering place one of the finest of its kind in the United States, to the eleven modern hotels which are to house the delegates who will travel Houstonward from the four quarters of the globe, thence to a hundred and one places which are being prepared to capture and hold the attention of all who travel to the 1925 convention.

At present, R. H. Cornell (Bob) as he is affectionately known to his myriad friends in all parts of the world, is just about the busiest person in the state of Texas. And the grand and glorious thing about his activities, is the fact that he seems to fairly thrive upon the multitudinous duties that are his.

As a matter of fact, he thinks, reads, writes, and even eats "advertising convention" with his meals. His capacity for work seems unlimited and beyond ordinary comprehension. He is getting away from day to day with doing the work of half a dozen ordinary individuals.

And all of this, that Houston may have the honor and distinction of entertaining the "Business Diplomats of the Earth," in a manner which, for elaborateness and completeness, shall outshine the past performance of all other advertising convention cities.

When delegates step from the trains Saturday, May 9, and others on Sunday, the 10th, they will be greeted with a welcome that will capture their whole and undivided interest from the time they arrive until the moment of their departure.

Houston is cleaning up and dressing up as never before. Truly, she is going to stand forth as a matchless jewel set in a wonderful tiara of precious stones.

Her streets will represent the motif effect of many nations, with bright new flags and thousands of yards of buntings, depicting the colors of many climes.

As for the entertainment in store for those who attend this "coming of age" party, the twenty-first annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, it gives promise of relegating far into the background, anything you have ever enjoyed.

DES MOINES CLUB NOMINATES

Local Advertising Men Pick Candidates for Executive Posts

W. A. Murchison, advertising director of Younker Brothers Company and Eugene McGuire, advertising manager of the Iowa Loan & Trust Company were nominated for the presidency of the Des Moines Advertising Club Tuesday. The election is to be held May 19. M. A. Hunnicutt of the Meredith Publications was the only candidate for vice-president. R. G. Armstrong of the Armstrong Agency was the only candidate for the office of secretary-treasurer. Their opponents will be named by the Board of Governors.

Ray Lockard who has served since last July as president of the Club presided at his last meeting Tuesday. He leaves this week for Philadelphia where he is to be associated with the Periodical Publishers Association. Mr. Lockard has been with this organization in Des Moines for a number of years. Roy Heartman, acting vice-president has been elected to act as president until July 1, when new officers for the Club are installed.

Specials and Agency Men Dine

The newspaper representatives' division of the Western Council of the American Association of Advertising Agencies met jointly with the space buyers' division of the council at a dinner at the Hotel Morrison on Tuesday, May 5. Larry M. Northrup, chairman of the Western Council, presided. The meeting had for its object establishing a better understanding and greater co-operation between the two divisions. George Pierson, of the J. Walter Thompson Company, Chicago, spoke for the newspaper representatives, while H. M. Ford spoke for the space buyers.

BROWNSVILLE A TEXAS COTTON CENTRE A RICH TRADING COMMUNITY

THE farthest city south in the United States is Brownsville, Texas, the town of 16,000 population, where Easter lilies bloom unprotected in February, March and April. It lies on the banks of the Rio Grande, 25 miles from Point Isabel, which is being made into a deep water port.

Brownsville is a cotton center. But diversified farming, with its concomitant prosperity, is the rule, and in addition to the "White King" other agricultural products produced there include winter truck and citrus fruit. Near the city are many beautiful farms, with the farmer-owners bound together in splendid community spirit. During the season of 1924 there were shipped from Brownsville 5,600 bales of cotton.

Manufacturing also plays a part in the life of this southern Texas city, which is the site of several industrial plants. These plants last year had an output estimated at nearly $400,000. They include a cotton oil mill, of 50 tons daily capacity; an ice plant with 130 tons daily capacity; three cotton gins, with a capacity of 225 bales per day, three hat factories, one shirt and overall factory, and two mattress factories.

The city is growing rapidly, according to local estimate. While the population in 1920 was listed at 11,791, the figure for 1924 is given as 16,000, with a city and suburban combined population declared to be 30,000. Of the total, 67.5 per cent are native whites, and 32.5 per cent foreign born with only 15 negroes, including children.

This population is served by one junior high school, one high school, one grammar school, five ward schools, one convent and two parochial schools. There are ten churches, representing the Roman Catholic, Episcopal, Christian Science, Methodist, Christion, Presbyterian and Baptist.

Ninety-nine per cent of the population lives in one-family houses.

Browsville claims its trade territory extends across the International Bridge to Matamoros, Mexico, a city of 10,000. El Jardin, Los Fresnos, Olmito, Barredo and Santa Maria, large truck, cotton and citrus fruit raisers, die within 50 minutes' automobile ride over cement highways. Brownsville owns its own water and light plants. Fort Brown, a regimental post, is located there.

PREPARING INLAND PROGRAM

Business in Morning, Pleasure in Afternoon, Schedule for West Baden Meet

Business and pleasure are scheduled to combine forces at West Baden, Ind., from May 21 to 27, to make the May meeting of the Inland Daily Press Association one of the best on record. Plans for the meeting call for business only during the forenoons, with sports and entertainment in the afternoon, and lectures, entertainment and dancing in the evening.

George W. Purcell, of the Vincennes (Ind.) Sun, is chairman of the entertainment committee, and he is sparing no efforts to make sure that the more serious part of the convention does not overshadow his particular field.

Lucile Brian Gilmore, Chicago representative of Editor & Publisher, has been appointed chairman of the entertainment committee for the women. Bridge parties, golf tournaments, horseback rides and other features are being arranged for them.

Other entertainment features being planned include a number of radio artists and a talk by Myra Helmer Pritchard, former Western golf champion.

Round-table discussion on newspaper problems and lectures by men prominent in their various fields are being arranged. Among the speakers are the Hon. Will H. Hays, former post-master general and now prominent in the motion picture field; Prof. Paul McNutt, of the University of Indiana; Hon. John H. Shields, of Seymour, Ind., the Indiana "Abraham Lincoln," and former Senator A. J. Beveridge of Indiana.

California Editors Hold Meeting

California's Governor, F. W. Richardson, on May 1, turned the gubernatorial quarters in the State Building in San Francisco over to the newspaper editors of California for their annual meeting. For the past 25 years the Governor has been president of the association. The annual outing of the California newspaper editors and publishers will be held July 6 to 13 at Lake Taho, Cal.

Four Column Ad Wired to Coast

Th San Francisco Chronicle, May 2, published a 4-column advertisement, three quarters of a page deep, sent by telephoto from New York. The advertisement was that of the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Company and was reproduced in the Chronicle as it appeared in the New York newspapers. Transmission required one and a half hours.

WINS LIBEL ACTION

Brockton (Mass.) Times Victor in $20,000 Suit Brought by Attorney

A verdict in favor of the Brockton (Mass.) Times was returned by a Plymouth county superior court jury April 27, in a suit for $20,000 brought by D. Perry Rice, a Rockland, Mass., lawyer, alleging libel.

The plaintiff alleged that the Times published a story that he had been summoned into Abington district court on an alleged contempt charge.

Rice actually appeared in court, but on a verbal request, no written summons having been issued. He claimed that as a result of the Brockton newspaper story his law practice had been materially injured.

The Times proved a willingness to retract its story, but testimony represented that Rice refused to accept a retraction.

NEW YORK DAILIES SHOW LINEAGE GAIN DURING APRIL

TOTAL advertising lineage in New York newspapers during April showed a gain of 240,870 lines over April 1924, according to figures compiled by the statistical department of the New York Evening Post. Total lineage during the month was 14,484,214 lines against 14,243,344 lines during April, 1924.

VISUALIZING IDEAS FOR LOCAL ADVERTISERS

How Laundry Men, Plumbers and Small Store Owners Can Be Educated to Using Newspaper Space, As Told By A. G. Newmyer, General Manager, New Orleans Item and Morning Tribune

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

A. G. NEWMYER, advertising magician, opened his bag of tricks this week, and laid out a handful of business building ideas for inspection by the newspaper craft. Mr. Newmyer is general manager and part owner of the New Orleans Item and Morning Tribune, and is also president of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, but as a hunter and trainer of ideas, he cuts the most interesting figure.

He snares ideas, harnesses them and puts them to work with such expedition that people are apt merely to blink, cry "Trick!" "Wizard!" and let it go at that.

This week he figuratively rolled up his sleeves and told how it was done. He explained how laundry men, plumbers, milk men and other local advertisers could be educated to the wisest and best use of newspaper advertising space.

"In the old days, it was handshaking and high hats that sold advertising," he began. "Today it is what you bring in your hand and carry under your hat that counts. Today an advertising man must have more ideas than a feature writer or an editor coupled with the accuracy of a certified public accountant. His stock in trade is ideas: his aim results.

"When seeking to interest an advertiser in your medium it is always wise practice, I think, to take something in your hand as well as in your head. Work out some idea on paper for using newspaper space effectively and show it to the prospective space buyer.

"Give him something concrete on which to focus his attention. Visualize possibilities for him. Sell advertising as a business builder, rather than sell your own newspaper.

"Not long ago advertising was looked upon as so much charity handed to a newspaper. Time and ideas in copy have proved in results that such an attitude is indefensible."

When first in New Orleans, Mr. Newmyer tried out some ideas on a laundry there. His father had lost money in that business, but the son had profited by the failure. The New Orleans laundry prospered.

It was the New Orleans newspaper custom in those days to print a special trade edition once a year. Business men who otherwise saw no need of day by day persistent advertising plugging, would in that edition contribute their bit toward support of the paper this once in the 365 days and six hours of a year. A case of out and out charity.

Mr. Newmyer called on the laundry Its boss, feet on desk, drawled in Southern fashion:

"Well, here's yo-alls $100 Ah gives yo every year," and handed out copy for insertion in the special trade edition, which proved to be a mere statement of the company's business address.

"Keep your $100," Mr. Newmyer rejoined. "I wouldn't have you throw your money away that way for anything.

"Remember, however," he cautioned, "you keep that $100. I'll come back and show you a better way to use it."

He did go back with written out ideas and kept going back many years. The laundry has grown to be one of the biggest in the South. Just recently it bought out most of the other companies in the same line, aided in its prosperity through newspaper space, correctly used.

Some of the ideas suggested were:

That the old custom of Monday washday be broken through advertising.

That net bags be used in the washing of linen, to prevent disagreeable marking; and that this improvement be advertised.

That a dry cleaning establishment be added to the laundry, so that the same trucks could be used for delivery; and that the public be made aware of the economies of this service through paid space in the newspapers.

A. G. NEWMYER

"What is more absurd than Monday washday," Mr. Newmyer said, commenting on how New Orleans made every day washday by newspaper advertising. "It means crowding business into the early days of each week, with concomitant constant labor turnover, and dissatisfaction among the help. It means running machinery double time certain days and then letting it stand idle.

"In the newspaper space the New Orleans laundry purchased all this was told the public. People were advised that better workmanship, better washing, would be assured if they sent their laundry Monday to be returned Wednesday; Tuesday to be returned Thursday; or Wednesday to be returned Friday. It wasn't long before this common sense became commonly understood."

Mr. Newmyer approached the New Orleans plumbers in a novel manner. They didn't understand the power of the printed word. People just got to know where New Orleans plumbers were located by chance, and took pot-luck or the word of friends as to whether or no they were good workmen.

The general manager of the New Orleans Item made it his business to find out the names and addresses of all the plumbers in his city. He made particular friends of one or two, and finally suggested to them they call a meeting of fellow plumbers. He furnished the list. The meeting was duly called, and was quite well attended. Mr. Newmyer was principal speaker. In his address he spoke somewhat as follows:

"You men know all too well the ever popular joke about the plumber; how he forgets his tools, swings lead on the job, and gets the reputation generally of being rather a robber.

"The trouble with you is that you laugh at this propaganda and do nothnig to put a stop to it.

"Do you want your sons to grow up to be plumbers? Personally, I would rather not have mine, if I were in your trade. Plumber and robber, if you will pardon my frankness, have come to mean altogether too much the same thing.

"Now this is no joke. My suggestion is that you men form an organization. Make strict membership rules, regarding workmanship, materials used, and fair profit. Then enforce them."

The plumbers did organize. They adopted a special seal for their association and advertised it in the daily newspapers. The idea took root and grew, much, according to Mr. Newmyer, to the profit of the plumbers.

"In tackling a music store account," Mr. Newmyer continued, "I find it helpful to read the musical trade papers. I talk and think music for considerable time, before I call on the prospective advertiser. Then I tell him among other things that in planning his advertising campaign, it is much better to sell the theory and idea of music, its refining influence in the home, than to use space entirely to selling a piano.

"From my reading I have a fair idea of what he is thinking about, and can talk to him on his own ground. This same practice applies to other businesses.

"The group idea works as well with music store owners, radio dealers, and real estate men as with the plumbers.

"Business men are finding out the truism that co-operation is cheaper than competition. In advertising they are learning the wisdom of telling through a centralized campaign, and selling through individual space purchases.

"Thus, in drawing up ideas for local advertisers, I try to make my suggested copy explain the utility of the article to be sold in general, before bringing in the selling points of the specific brand."

Mr. Newmyer started his career as a secretary on a Washington newspaper. Later he transfered to the editorial department of the same daily. Rumors came there was to be a shake-up among reporters and rewrite men. Mr. Newmyer hurried to make certain a job for himself on the business side.

"And I have kept close behind the cash register ever since," he laughed.

In addition to his present position he has been connected with the Boston Journal, Baltimore News, and Philadelphia Times, when these newspapers were owned by Frank Munsey. From 1909 until 1911, he was foreign advertising manager for the Munsey company, with headquarters in New York. He resigned this position to go to New Orleans. From 1917 to 1919 he served as vice-president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. He has been very active in the affairs of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, having been chairman of that association's committee on advertising, prior to his present office as president.

ANTI-GAMBLING ACT NOW A LAW

Michigan's Governor Signs Bahorski Bill Prohibiting Printing of Racing and Other Gambling Odds

LANSING, Mich., May 4.—With the signing today by Governor Alex J. Groesbeck of the Bahorski anti-gambling act, publication of racing forms and information relative to betting on any contest or event whose outcome is not certain, is again unlawful in Michigan. The measure, in almost the same form, was enacted at the 1923 session of the legislature, but due to a technical error in the procedure of its passage it was thrown out by the Supreme Court last December. Immediate steps were taken by Senator Joseph Bahorski, one of the earlier act's cosponsors, to introduce the measure again at this session. The bill was revised slightly to make it less liable to attack in the courts and was passed unanimously by both houses of the legislature. An immediate effect clause was attached to the new law.

The present Bahorski act, like its predecessor, is exceedingly far-reaching in its provisions, both in relation to its effect on newspapers and in its general gambling prohibitions. Newspapers, whether published in Michigan or in other states, cannot legally carry information in this state relative to any odds on sporting events or other occurrences, even after such events have taken place. Quotation, for instance, of odds on presidential elections, world series baseball games, automobile or horse races of major calibre, all of which are frequently carried in news reports of the national wire services, are absolutely forbidden under the law, although stories containing such information went unchallenged frequently while the old act was in force.

The primary intent of that portion of the law affecting newspapers is admittedly to put an end to the practice of some newspapers of playing up racing news, with daily selections and full information in regard to betting. Betting on horse races has long been prohibited in Michigan, but the bookmaker evil, it is declared, has continued to flourish up until the time certain agencies, aided very materially by the Detroit News, crusaded sufficiently against this form of gambling to place the old Voorhies-Bahorski act on the statute books.

The principal changes incorporated in the new law are a reclassification of offenders so that frequenters of gambling establishments are made guilty of misdemeanors only, while actual proprietors and employes of such "joints" are classed as felons, and addition of a section declaring that court decisions throwing out certain parts of the act shall not operate to make the entire act invalid. Under the old law, it has been frequently pointed out, patrons of a theater in which stagehands were found "shooting craps" behind the wings, would have been guilty of felonies and subject to jail terms and heavy fines. The probability of renewed court attacks on the measure is seen, as recognized in the attaching of the new section.

Some of the claimed weaknesses of the new law which might result in successful court action against the measure are: the broad provisions of the initial clause, which prohibits the taking of money with promise of payment contingent on the outcome of "any event not known by the parties to be certain"; the prohibition of the publication of odds after a sporting event has taken place; the provision that "any words, figures, or characters, written, printed, or exposed upon a blackboard, placard, or otherwise, in a place alleged to be used * * * for such business, purporting or appearing to be a name of a horse or jockey or a description of or reference to a trial or contest of skill, speed or endurance of man, beast, bird, or machine or game, competition, political nomination, appointment or election, or other act or event, or any odds, bet, combination bet or other stake * * * or any code, cipher, or substitute therefor, shall be prima facie evidence of the existence of the race, game, contest, etc."

The first of these "weak links," it is claimed, would technically prohibit the writing of all insurance but the life variety; the second, it is asserted, is a useless interference with the "freedom of the press," while the third, it is contended by some, is analogous to ruling the presence of a whiskey bottle evidence that the dry law has been violated.

The thoroughness of coverage in the homes of its territory—unequaled by any other newspaper in a city of Detroit's size or larger—plus the prosperity of the field and The News' wonderful result-getting ability has again given it first place in America in total advertising for the first three months of 1925.

Last year The News established a world's record with 30,604,518 lines. If the first quarter of 1925 is any indication of what will follow, The Detroit News will establish another and greater world's record for this year. Already its total is ahead of 1924 for the same period by 237,972 lines. Not only does The News rank first among newspapers publishing seven issues a week but its week-day issue is also first among all newspapers publishing week-day evenings only.

A. N. P. A. WILL CARRY NEWSPRINT DEFINITION FIGHT TO CONGRESS

President Thomason Asks Maintenance of Present Rule Until Next Session Following Two-Hour Conference With Treasury Officials

By J. BART CAMPBELL

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 5.—Treasury officials were asked Tuesday by S. E. Thomason, president of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, to leave the present definition of standard newsprint paper as it is until his organization can carry the entire subject to Congress.

Mr. Thomason voiced his request at a two hour conference of representatives of the newspaper publishing, paper importing and paper manufacturing interests and of government officials held in the office of McKenzie Moss, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

The conference, a continuation of the one begun several weeks ago, found the different interests represented still far apart on the proposed change in the definition of standard newsprint paper.

An agreement appeared remote when the conference finally ended.

Mr. Thomason sketched briefly the conference held recently at New York between spokesmen for the newspaper publishers and paper manufacturers in an attempt to arrive at an agreement.

The newspaper publishers are not opposing the move of the manufacturers to block bootlegging of newsprint paper. He explained he proposed that paper imported for newspaper publishing should be certified to by publishers or importers. Mr. Moss indicated that treasury officials are of the opinion that an order for such a certificate could hardly be promulgated satisfactorily.

When Congress enacted the tariff law it did nt anticipate that the newspapers of the country would remain in a static condition, Mr. Thomason continued. Newsprint used today is of a superior quality compared with that used in 1922 when the tariff law became operative. He stressed the pictorial development since then of the newspaper as one reason a better finish of newsprint is necessary.

Some newspapers are now using a super-calendared paper for picture sections. Better paper is sure to be more and more required as progress continues to be made by the newspaper, and the publishing interests therefore must not be hampered by any "narrow definition" of newsprint paper.

The cost of the paper used in a newspaper is generally regarded as one-half of the cost of publishing the newspaper, Mr. Thomason stated in reply to an inquiry by Mr. Moss.

Newspaper publishers desired to be given a free field for development. A "narrow definition" would presume the newsprint industry must remain static. Publishers must be treated tolerantly in the matter of weight. They are now looking for a better finish of paper.

Discussing the use of clay and the increasing amount of ash content, Mr. Thomason argued that 7½ per cent ash content would be reasonable. He referred to the publishing of a London newspaper on newsprint made of straw as he dwelt on the possibility of developing further this use of straw. He also talked about the use of sulphate in place of sulphite in newsprint in Canada.

Henry A. Wise, representing the Import Paper Committee, took issue with Mr. Thomason on his suggestion that the entire matter be deferred until Congress could act on it. Mr. Wise also differed with Mr. Thomason when the spokesman for the A. N. P. A. expressed the opinion that if it were possible to make for general newspaper publishing a paper similar to that used by the Saturday Evening Post it should be defined as standard newsprint paper.

Mr. Thomason explained that newspaper publishers held that any paper available for printing their newspapers should be so regarded.

Mr. Wise replied that if Mr. Thomason's argument were to prevail the paper schedule of the tariff act meant nothing and gave no protection at all to the paper industry in this country.

It was the purpose of Congress to protect every branch of the industry except newsprint, Mr. Wise contended. Paper manufacturers in their efforts to obtain a new definition of standard newsprint paper do not desire to hamper the newspaper publishers in any way. The proposed change in the definition is broad enough to care for the present wants of the publishers.

Jules Chopak, counsel for the importers, also took exception to the position assumed by the A. N. P. A., that newsprint paper imported into this country is not to be considered newsprint paper when the publishers do not use it. He argued it would not be practicable to check up on all such importations.

C. C. Parker, as spokesman for the Import Paper Committee, declared an investigation he had made revealed only one newspaper in the United States using super-calendared paper. He said it would cost manufacturers approximately $3 a ton more to produce newsprint paper from sulphate than to make it from sulphite.

He directed attention to the use for the first time of the term standard newsprint paper in the tariff law of 1922. He asserted that half-tone paper is being offered for importation free of duty as newsprint paper.

The National Paper Trade Association submitted a brief in which objection was made to the proposed new definition, especially regarding size and width of sheets. The brief contended the definition would be unjustified and un-American class legislation.

In conclusion Mr. Thomason informed Mr. Moss that newspaper publishers are satisfied with the present definition, and thought the matter should be held in abeyance until Congress could take hold of it properly.

Those present at the conference included John R. Miller, of the West Virginia Paper and Pulp Company; F. C. Lyden, International Paper Company; L. B. Palmer and Elisha Hanson, of the A. N. P. A.; Dr. F. K. Burgess, director of the Bureau of Standards; B. W. Scribner, chief of its Paper Division; O. M. Butler, acting chief of the Paper Division of the Commerce Department; E. W. Camp, director of the Customs Service; F. J. Sensenbrenner, of the Kimberly-Clark Company; W. B. Bullock, secretary, and John R. Hecht, customs expert of the Import Paper Committee.

TYPE DRESS OF OLD N. Y. SUN REVIVED

THE Three Em Dash, sprightly official monthly publication of the Newspaper Club of New York, revived the famous type dress of the old New York Sun with its May issue now being distributed. Francis J. Tietsort, of the New York American editorial staff, is editor.

The editorial announcement of the typographical change reads:

"We have seized the opportunity to alter the type dress of the paper, in pursuance of a plan afoot for some months, to give it the approximate garb of simple type elegance once worn by the New York Sun in its heyday as the morning newspaper more than a score of years ago. We trust in these days of scream and feature heads it will not seem too demure.

"The columns have been widened to eleven and one-half picas, with margins and depth of column in proportion for the sake of symmetry. The result, we hope, will appear wholesome. The idea came of a thought that the change would be appropriate for sentimental reasons, since the old Sun of Boss Lord was long known appreciatively and affectionately, especially in the time of Frank Ward O'Malley's famed joy pieces, as 'the newspaper man's newspaper.'"

The ceremony of presentation of the "palms" was performed in Montreal on April 23, by Baron de Vitrolles, Consul-General of France in Canada.

The Preference of the Multitude

THE safest guide to the selection of productive advertising media is to be found in the preference of the reading multitude.

If in a field of a dozen newspapers, a single publication dominates so completely as to have a circulation greater than that of all the other newspapers combined, it is only too obvious that that paper is bound to be productive of results.

This is precisely the position of the Forward. Its unchallenged leadership throughout several decades has made it the most virile and vital force in the life of American Jewry; and its preference among the vast multitude of Jewish readers has earned for it the preference of leading local and national advertisers.

3c daily and 5c on Sunday—with a special Rotogravure supplement—its present circulation is substantially in excess of 200,000 daily.

REMBOLD CELEBRATES 70TH BIRTHDAY; 50 YEARS ON CINCINNATI DAILY

Manager Cincinnati Times-Star Tendered Surprise Party by Staff—73 Employes Have More Than 20 Years' Service

TRIBUTE was paid to long years of friendship and long years of service when the whole personnel of the Cincinnati Times-Star organization joined in a surprise party at the residence of Mr. C. H. Rembold, manager of the Times-Star, to celebrate his seventieth birthday.

C. H. Rembold

It is only recently, on March 1 last, that Mr. Rembold celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his connection with the Times-Star. But the birthday celebration for which preparations were made in secret, was made a greater occasion. More than 100 members of the Times-Star organization attended the party.

Mr. Rembold began his business career as a clerk on the old Cincinnati Times at a salary of $6 a week. Later be became a bookkeeper at $10 a week. When the Times was consolidated with the Star in 1880, Mr. Rembold was made business manager of the Times-Star. Some years ago be became manager of the paper and still occupies that position.

Mr. Rembold's birthday fell on May 4. It was celebrated one day in advance in order that everyone of the Times-Star organization might be present.

Mr. Rembold, in addition to his position on the Times-Star is a Director of the Cincinnati Terminal Warehouse Company, a director of the Cincinnati and Covington Suspension Bridge Company, a director of the Fay and Egan Manufacturing Company, and a director of the Cincinnati Zoological Garden. He is a Thirty-second Degree Mason and chairman of the trustees of the Scottish Rite.

Incidental to the celebration of Mr. Rembold's long service, the fact was established that 73 of the executives and employes of the Times-Star have been in its service more than 20 years. The list is as follows:

DAILY HONORS VETERAN

Mailing Room Superintendent Completes 50th Year of Service

George Mulford, veteran superintendent of the mailing room of the Detroit Free Press, was felicitated by officials of the company and his fellow workers recently on his seventy-first birthday.

Mulford, who is rounding out his 50th year as chief of the Free Press mailing department, joined the organization in 1867, at the age of 13 years. Eight years later, at the age of 21, he was made superintendent of his department, which position he has filled efficiently ever since.

Eight years ago, on the fiftieth anniversary of his coming to the Free Press, the management held a banquet in his honor at the old Cadillac Hotel. He was presented with a gold watch.

Mr. Mulford has missed scarcely a night's work in 50 years, and on his seventy-first birthday he reiterated his intention to retain active charge of the mailing room for many more years. These facts were incorporated in a tribute to him read over WCX, the Free Press radio station on the following evening.

EDITOR LETS STUDENTS RUN PAPER AND GETS A BROKEN NOSE

BEWARE, country weekly editor, of the journalism student who starts out to be a crusader, or the fate that was L. W. Osborne's of the Tomahawk (Wis.) Leader, may befall you.

For Mr. Osborne is now nursing a broken nose as a result of turning his paper over to four budding journalists of the University of Wisconsin for a week. Of course, when he gave the students complete control of the paper he didn't know they were going to expose the corrupt dance halls at the outskirts of Tomahawk and write an editorial about them, nor that he was going to get a broken nose as a result.

These students started out in true crusading style to investigate the dance halls at the border of the town.

And when the newspaper, the product of their efforts, came forth, its editorial columns were enlivened by a vitriolic denunication of moral conditions in the local dance palace. Here is part of the editorial:

"There is one dance hall within the very city limits of Tomahawk in which the influence is more than sinister. There one may see women of 30 fondling boys of 14 or 16, while innocent young girls of 14 or 15, painted and powdered, dance around in the arms of drunken sots twice their age.

"Tomahawk has its cesspools of vice as any other city. It should rid itself of them. The moral character of the younger element is in grave danger and if drastic action is not taken in the near future, the citizens of this community may expect the worse. Public opinion must be aroused at once. Let these dens of iniquity be closed once and for all. Tomahawk must maintain its morals and respect."

Convinced that they had done their duty to the moral uplift of Tomahawk, the students returned to their classrooms. But then Osborne's troubles began. For Sam Winkler, proprieter of the dance hall in question, got busy.

And now Osborne has filed charges against Winkler in the county court. First, according to these charges, Winkler came to the office and offered to take Osborne on with bare fists or jackknives. When the editor declared he was very busy writing a dunning letter to an old subscriber, Winkler became enraged and went out after his son, Peter.

Together, upon returning, they dragged Osborne from his desk out into the streets and there it was that the editor received his broken nose and sundry minor fractures.

The son pleaded guilty to an assault charge of $25 fine and court costs, but Sam Winkler's fighting blood is still up. He pleaded not guilty, and the case is still pending. Meanwhile Tomahawk knows all about its dance halls.

LARGEST BROOKLYN CIRCULATION OF ANY BROOKLYN NEWSPAPER

The Rising Market Value of Beauty

THE many printers and newspaper publishers who have for years been educating their clients to an appreciation of the value of good printing are now finding that task increasingly easy. Big advertisers no longer have to be "sold" on quality—they are demanding it insistently.

Linotype Typography has been an important factor in bringing about this changed attitude. For years the Linotype Company has been demonstrating to advertisers the increased effectiveness of good typography and showing them how it can be economically produced.

Today the Manual of Linotype Typography is probably more widely used than any other typographic reference book by advertisers and printers.

The program of Linotype Typography meets the growing needs of the Printing Industry with the production for the machine of type faces distinguished by usage and design

AD. DRIVE INCREASED ST. LOUIS INDUSTRIES

Municipal Campaign Balances City as Industrial Center, Report States —10 New Firms Locate There

A survey made five years ago when the St. Louis Municipal Advertising Campaign was started showed that St. Louis needed factories in sixteen more lines to make it a well-balanced industrial center. As result of this five-year campaign, fifty-one new industries representing ten of these sixteen lines, have been brought to St. Louis.

Other tangible results of the St. Louis Municipal Advertising Campaign are set out in the annual report of the campaign for 1924, as follows:

"St. Louis has become known as the 'best-balanced' large city, because of the wide diversity of its industries. No one line of business uses more than 8 per cent of our labor supply.

"St. Louis is gaining in population, business, wealth and commerce.

"The spirit of progress awakened by the advertising has developed a type of citizenship which responds to community undertakings, and has caused them to work together for the common good.

"These things all mean increased prosperity for the city—a prosperity in which every resident shares, directly or indirectly."

The campaign was conducted under the auspices of the City of St. Louis, the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce and the Advertising Club of St. Louis. John A. Bush, president of the Brown Shoe Company, was chairman of the general committee, and Walter B. Weisenburger, vice-president of the National Bank of Commerce, was chairman of the advisory committee of the 1924 fund.

The expenditures for the first four years of the campaign were $50,000 annually and last year they were $70,000. One-half of the sum required is appropriated by the city, the remainder is raised by popular subscription. This year an effort is being made to increase the fund.

Two large advertisements were used during last November in the New York Times, World, Post, Herald Tribune, Commercial and Journal of Commerce, the primary purpose being to present St. Louis message of progress and industrial growth to financiers. The four St. Louis daily newspapers were also used.

In advance of the fall (1924) and the spring (1925) buying seasons, advertisements totalling 25,500 inches were run throughout the St. Louis trade zone, 127 daily newspapers in 97 cities in 19 states being used on July 22 and 29, and 128 daily newspapers in 19 states on January 22 and 29. This advertising was directed to retail merchants.

Magazines and trade publications also were used, booklets for follow-up purposes also were employed. This year an added feature was a News Bureau under the direction of Gus V. Kenton.

Launch Biggest News Contest

The third annual Biggest News Contest in Des Moines schools has been opened by the Des Moines Register. Miss Sara Toubes is in charge of the contest. Students in the high schools and junior high schools select each week what they believe to have been the biggest news feature in the Register. They then write 300 words explaining their reasons for their judgment of a story. A loving cup is to be awarded by the Register to the winner in both the senior and junior divisions.

Kansas Daily to Build

Contracts have been let by the Tribune-Monitor Binding and Printing Company, publishers of the Ft. Scott (Kan.) Tribune-Monitor, for the construction of a new reinforced concrete building. The structure is to be two stories high, 35 feet wide by 120 feet long, and of the latest type. George W. Marble, president of the National Editorial Association, is publisher.

Coast Veteran Honored

Editors and reporters of the Santa Ana (Cal.) Daily Register and members of the Santa Ana Lions Club joined April 23, to honor Horace Fine, dean of Orange county newspaper men, one of the best known members of the press in Southern California. The occasion was the annual "Horace Fine" day of the Lions Club. Fine worked for the Santa Ana Blade for 26 years and has been a member of the Register staff for 10. For many years he was the local correspondent for the Los Angeles Examiner and the Associated Press. The newspaper men presented their dean with a silver cigarette and match case, properly engraved. The presentation was made by Mason Yould, assistant managing editor of the Register.

Big Editions in Cleveland

The Cleveland Press issued the largest edition it ever published on April 17, consisting of a 56-page issue packed heavily with advertising. The paper ran a note of apology for having been compelled to leave out several hundred inches of additional advertising for that one issue. The Cleveland News on the same date issued the largest edition it ever published, 48 pages. The May Company, large Cleveland department store, was responsible for the heavy editions, taking 14 pages of advertising in the Press and 13 in the News. The following morning the same store carried three full pages in the Plain Dealer and two full pages in the Times. Generally, it was the greatest advertising day in the history of Cleveland newspapers.

Publisher to Build Hotel

O. H. Woody, publisher of the Okanogan (Wash.) Independent and president of the Washington State Press Association, has announced he will build a modern hotel in Okanogan to cost $70,000, to be completed Dec. 1.

Van Laeys Succeeds Cady

William S. Cady, for two years advertising manager of the Wichita (Kan.) Beacon, has resigned. J. L. Van Laeys, for 20 years in the advertising field in Kansas, will succeed Mr. Cady. He has been doing reorganization work for the Beacon for several months.

TRUE ECONOMY

or

"Few Penny" Fallacy!

Stereotype mats, both wet and dry, are but a means to an end—and that is to make possible perfect printing plates.

When the primary factor in the mind of the manufacturer is to make mats that can be sold at a "price," quality inevitably suffers.

We never lose sight of the fact that Certified Dry Mats are but a means to the best possible printing results and with that thought uppermost in mind we make the best mats we know how.

Certifieds are by no means the cheapest mats, but publishers and stereotypers tell us they are by far the best dry mats they have ever used. Therein lies the distinction and the difference.

The quality of Certified Dry Mats is at once apparent when they are molded—deep, sharp, even impressions without breaking. Then come into play casting qualities that insure the production of perfect printing plates. And there is a simple way of checking up on these characteristics of Certifieds by pulling your proofs and comparing the printed pages!

The few extra pennies invested in Certified Dry Mats will pay you worth while dividends by insuring good, clean printing, not once in a while, but day after day, regularly and uniformly.

It's a pleasure for us to demonstrate to you the value and merit of Certifieds—it costs you nothing and there's no obligation whatsoever on your part.

LOGAN EXPLAINS A. A. A. PROBE OF RADIO ADVERTISING

Chairman of Association's Radio Committee Says Value of Medium Unknown—Will Make Careful and Impartial Investigation

THE American Association of Advertising Agencies, through Thomas F. Logan, Chairman of its National Radio Committee, is now engaged upon a careful and impartial study of the results of advertising from radio broadcasting stations.

In an address to the Western Council of the Association, on April 28, at the Drake Hotel, Chicago, where the announcement was made, Mr. Logan outlined the Association's plan.

"The technique of broadcast advertising is the technique of an infant art," he said. "There is a vast amount of fumbling going on. Users of the medium hesitate to express an opinion as to its value. The few who do hazard an opinion help us but little. The reason for this is that, with a few exceptions, they have failed to devise means of testing the value of their advertising. They are drawn to the use of the medium through a general interest in radio, through a sense of the vast potentialities of a medium for reaching so many people at once; but having used it, they do not know whether they have used it well or have wasted their opportunities. Much the same statement might have been made of advertising in general, however, as recently as a quarter century ago. Advertisers until that time had been stumbling, but as Lincoln said, 'stumbling forward', gradually discovering sound principles and devising methods of applying them to individual problems.

"Broadcast advertising technique begins with the recognition of good advertising essentials. Some advertisers will find it necessary to provide supreme artists in order to obtain a hold on the attention of large groups of radio listeners. Others may be clever enough and fortunate enough to devise less expensive means of gaining this interest.

"With all advertisers considering the possibilities of its additional means of communication, it was quite natural that a real problem should arise. So far seven men have been able, merely through a gentlemen's agreement, to hold back a flood of indiscriminate broadcast advertising that might have damaged radio irreparably.

"The seven men mainly responsible for checking a tide of bargain advertising that would have impaired the public's interest in radio and, perhaps, have caused wasteful results and a reaction against radio, were led by Secretary Hoover, of the Department of Commerce, and included David Sarnoff, vice-president and general manager of the Radio Corporation of America; Walter Gifford, president of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company; Owen D. Young, chairman of the board, and Gerard Swope, president of the General Electric Company; Guy Tripp, chairman of the board, and H. P. Davis, vice-president of the Westinghouse Electric Company."

In the address before the Western Council of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, Mr. Logan referred to an unwritten agreement that still restrains open and direct advertising from broadcasting stations.

"The Radio Corporation of America," said Mr. Logan, "does not accept advertising at all. The American Telephone and Telegraph Company is accepting only such advertising as will fulfill the requirements of legitimate entertainment. Neither the General Electric nor the Westinghouse stations are accepting advertising at all. The advertising possibilities are great, but the Federal Government has quite obviously determined that there should be no exploitation of the public, and that the public's interest should have first consideration. The Association of Advertising Agencies is in harmony with Mr. Hoover's policy.

"Here and there new broadcasting stations are springing up, some of them admittedly for advertising purposes. And yet, so far, neither the broadcasters nor the advertisers can say with absolute assurance that broadcasting advertising really pays. Certainly if there is a reaction against it, such as there was against advertising in the motion-picture houses, the Government will step in.

"While the Government is marking time, simply relying upon the gentleman's agreement with the larger companies, whose leadership will mainly influence radio advertising, the American Association of Advertising Agencies has launched a study of the possibilities and limitations of broadcast advertising.

"One of the functions of the American Association of Advertising Agencies is to promote good advertising and discourage wasteful advertising, thereby serving the public and protecting the interests of the advertisers.

"Advertising by radio is still in the experimental stage; and the Association, recognizing the tremendous possibilities in any medium that permits an advertiser to gain the attention of several million people at once, has appointed a committee to study the new medium.

"No recommendation for or against advertising from broadcasting stations will be made by the committee. Its work will be confined to the collection of facts and data and experiences and an analysis of all the assembled information.

"While the potentialities of broadcast advertising are large, there are factors of public good-will involved which make it desirable that the public itself should make the final decision as to whether or not this form of advertising should be constructively developed.

"Whether this form of advertising will produce profitable results for advertisers will depend entirely upon the public reaction to it. The committee of the Association will deal impartially with data available, collecting it for the benefit of advertisers."

N. Y. District Reporters Hold Party

Newspaper men on the "late watch" early May 5, listened in as entertainment features were broadcast from the first dinner of the district reporters of New York held at the Cafe Boulevard to celebrate formation of their first association. The party was still in progress when final editions of Sunday newspapers went to press. During broadcasting of the event, the night city desk of the Chicago Tribune telephoned congratulations to the New York association and announced they would immediately take steps towards forming a similar organization in Chicago. Miles Bath, of the City News Association, was toastmaster at the dinner, at which more than 250 were present. James Lewis of the New York World, was largely responsible for the dinner and the organization of the new association.

DECEITFUL PUBLICITY SCORED BY EDITOR

Newspapers Must Have Truth Both in Publicity and Advertising, M. S. Sherman, Editor, Springfield Union Declares

The fine line of demarcation which exists between what is news and what is advertising was pointed out by Maurice S. Sherman, editor of the Springfield (Mass.) Union in an address delivered before the Publicity Club in Springfield last week. Long experience has trained editors to have a real appreciation of the kind of news that is of interest or value and the task of drawing the line between advertising and news is a task that lies with the newspapers alone, said Mr. Sherman.

If the publicity director and the advertising agent will deal as frankly and as candidly with the newspapers as they would have the newspapers deal with them, they will experience little trouble, he declared. He characterized a false statement, given to the press with a deliberate intent to deceive, as a "bad check," pretty certain to come back upon the giver.

In defining advertising, Mr. Sherman said:

"Advertising is the means taken to sell a commodity or an idea. An advertisement is a public notice, especially a notice inserted for a price in some public print. Generally it aims to create a market for the sale of goods and by so doing to stimulate both consumption and production. Its success depends upon the merit of the article advertised, the medium resorted to, and the need that exists or can be created for the use of the article.

"To be effective over any continued period, it must be honest in its representations. An inferior product extolled in extravagant and exaggerated fashion can be disposed of for a time through advertising, but not for long. The duration depends solely on the length of time it takes the buying public to become acquainted with the deception. Too much emphasis cannot be placed upon quality, dependability and truthful exploitation. Price is a factor, of course, in creating demand, but the public is always willing to pay a fair price for a meritorious article. What it particularly objects to is paying a long price for a poor article."

Mr. Sherman defined news as whatever proves interesting to the public. He said that news always gives publicity and that it frequently does give advertising quite beyond price to buy.

"There is one very essential difference, however, between news and advertising," he pointed out. "The public is willing to pay to get the news—not all that it ought to pay, perhaps, but at least something. Advertising, on the other hand, is something for which the advertiser himself must pay in order to get information to the public."

In touching upon the inter-relation between publicity, advertising, news and propaganda, Mr. Sherman said that they are at times so intimately related that it is quite impossible to unscramble them.

"Because there is no medium of publicity so important as the newspaper, it is of the utmost concern to the public that the publicity be truthful to the best of the newspaper's knowledge and belief. And it is just as important that the paid advertisements should be truthful. Nothing is more interesting in all the world than facts and an advertisement that presents the facts interestingly has tremendous pulling power," he concluded.

"More than a Million for More than a Year"

The average net paid circulation of the Chicago Sunday Herald and Examiner for the six months ending March 31st, was

This is the highest record ever attained by any American newspaper. It is the peak of a record that has been maintained at "more than a million for more than a year."

The vast army of readers who have contributed to this achievement are a prosperous class, a discriminating class for they pay more for the Chicago Sunday Herald and Examiner than they would have to pay for another newspaper.

National advertisers have the benefit of this Niagara of sales power at the lowest milline rate of any Chicago newspaper, daily or Sunday—in fact of any newspaper rate of standard record.

The advertising message of any manufacturer of a meritorious product, printed more than a million times in a single issue, placed in over a million homes, and read by more than three million people, will naturally be translated into sales.

Fight Billboard Ban

The Weber Poster Advertising Service, Inc., which has been refused permits to erect billboards in Duluth, Minn., by the city council of that city has taken the matter into the state courts. The city council of Duluth adopted a resolution to the effect that billboards "are a menace to public safety" and ordered that further permits for their erection should be refused. The order has been in effect since July, 1925, the Weber Poster Advertising Service, Inc., claims.

The advertising firm claims in its appeal to the courts that the billboards that it has erected "have never blown down, are not dangerous and no one has ever suffered injury or damages from the billboards."

Daily Celebrates 21st Year

The Boston Evening American recently passed its 21st birthday and recalled some of its early history. The first issue of the paper was of 24 pages and carried more than 100 columns of advertising. The presses were started by a button pressed by Gov. Bates at the State House. James W. Reardon, at present managing editor of the Boston Daily Advertiser was the first city editor of the Boston American.

Governor Signs Newspaper Bill

Governor M. E. Trapp of Oklahoma, has approved an act of the state legislature authorizing a newspaper to change its name without losing its status as a legal publication.

Maine Planning to Advertise

Maine residents are preparing to carry out plans recently mapped out at a conference called by Gov. Ralph D. Brewster for advertising the state particularly as a summer resort. It is planned to use newspaper space in various parts of the country. Gov. Brewster told the people at the conference that Maine residents of St. Petersburg, Fla., were to place at their own expense a full page advertisement in a Florida paper describing the beauties of Maine and inviting the winter as well as the permanent residents of Florida to visit the state this year.

HEARST CENTRALIZES BOSTON MANAGEMENT

Executive Control of Morning Advertiser, Evening American and Sunday Advertiser Consolidated Under Andrews

Consolidation of the executive managements of William Randolph Hearst's three Boston papers, the Morning Advertiser, Evening American and Sunday Advertiser, was effected last week. There will be no change in the physical properties and the individual papers will retain their identities.

Under the consolidation Barrett Andrews, publisher of the Boston American, becomes publisher of the three papers. Edward R. Mahoney, who came to the Boston American as managing editor from the Chicago American in January, will be managing editor of the trio, while James T. Williams, Jr., who recently went from the Boston Transcript where he was managing editor, to the American, will be editor.

John Fitzpatrick has been appointed assistant managing editor, in active charge of the American, while James Riordon will be assistant managing editor in charge of the tabloid edition of the Advertiser. John Gowan will be the editor of the Sunday Advertiser. Mortimer Berkowitz, advertising manager of the Advertiser, is advertising director of the three papers. M. S. Lunn will be circulation manager, which post he held on the American.

Edgar D. Shaw, former publisher of the Advertiser, will go to New York to do special work for Arthur Brisbane, it is announced. T. V. Ranck, managing editor of the Advertiser, will be transferred to another Hearst paper.

The consolidation was the result of a conference in Boston last week attended by William Randolph Hearst, Arthur Brisbane, Barrett Andrews, Edward R. Mahoney, Edgar D. Shaw, T. V. Ranck and other executives, and was effective at once. The tabloid edition of the Morning Advertiser will be retained, it is announced. Although the consolidation will necessitate a slight reduction in the circulation department, where duplication of effort existed, no reduction will be made in the editorial or advertising staffs, according to Managing Editor Mahoney In fact the editorial and photographic personnel will be increased, it is stated. Special effort will be made to still further increase the circulation of the Sunday Advertiser, it was stated.

Rochester's German Daily Celebrates

The Rochester Daily Abendpost, German language newspaper, issued a special edition May 2, celebrating the 75th anniversary of the establishment of the German language press in Rochester. Julius W. Stoll is president of the Rochester German Publishing Company, publishers of the Abendpost. Mr. Stoll founded that newspaper in 1882. All of the Rochester German dailies were subsequently merged with the Abendpost in 1902.

Sporting Editor Passes Bar Exam

Charles B. Coppen, for 20 years a member of the staff of the Providence (R. I.) Journal and Bulletin, and for the last seven years sporting editor of the Journal, has passed the examinations of the Rhode Island Bar and formed a partnership for the general practice of law under the firm name of Davis and Coppen. Mr. Coppen will continue his work with the Journal for the present.

Murderess Confesses to Girl Reporter

Through her kindly attentions and persistent efforts, Miss Maureen McKernan, reporter for the Chicago Tribune, last week obtained from Mrs. Anna Cunningham, in a cell at Crown Point, Ind., a confession that she had murdered three of her children by spreading arsenic on their bread. The Associated Press credited Miss McKernan and the sheriff jointly with obtaining the admission of guilt.

National Advertising

New York Evening Newspapers

For the first four months of 1925, The New York Sun leads the second New York evening newspaper by more than a quarter of a million lines in National Advertising.

During this period The Sun has published more than a million and a quarter lines of National Advertising and has had a gain of more than a quarter of a million lines in this classification—a larger gain by over one hundred thousand lines than the second evening newspaper.

Among the six-day newspapers of the United States, The New York Sun was fourth in volume of National Advertising during the year 1924.

The Sun does not accept any advertisement that would injure the confidence of its readers in reputable advertising or that would be likely to cause Sun readers money loss, injury to health or morals, or that would be otherwise inconsistent with The Sun's rigidly constructive advertising policy. All advertisements offered to The Sun must comply with standards set up for the protection of its readers.

The Sun is an independent, vigorous, sane and clean newspaper that is productive to the advertiser because its readers have confidence in its news and advertising pages.

TEXAS

ORGANIZED advertising this year honors Texas with the twenty-first annual gathering of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, meeting next week at Houston. The host which last year assembled in stately, ancient halls of London, in the presence of royalty, now turns to an American commonwealth of five million souls, living in the midst of modern plenty, on soil of inexhaustible resource and imbued with a winning spirit of youth and driving progress.

The advertising men who go to Houston are individuals to appreciate Texas—the romance of her incredible commercial and industrial development under hands that truly valued the foundations laid by Stephen Fuller Austin and Sam Houston and their hardy descendants. How magnificently has man wrought the changes! The savagery of the aborigine, the imperialism of old England, France and Spain, the tyranny of Mexico, the brutality of pioneer life, the armed man on horseback, the stubborn wilderness stretching over 265,896 square miles—these are the background shades of today's brilliant setting of human happiness, prosperity, activity, in a field so rich and promising that it has few rivals under the sun.

The vast majority of Texas people are native white, and they control government, business and the social life. Two-thirds are dwellers of the rural districts. Every man of family is guaranteed the right to possess a home, and the tools of a work-a-day life, exempt from any form of legal taxation. Texas provides lavishly for the education of her youth. The per capita state allowance for education is $15 per annum. That does not include supplemental taxes levied by districts and cities. Her love of religion, art and learning is evidenced by the magnificence of the architecture of her places of worship, public buildings, libraries and homes and the preservation of the beautiful relics of ancient civilization. The Rice Institute, which the advertising delegates will visit, is being built and maintained out of a $10,000,000 fund and is dedicated to the advancement of letters, science and art.

Texas' budget is the 19th in the list of states. The assessed valuation of her realty exceeds two and a quarter billions. Her net state debt is less than $5,000,000. Her marvelous bank resources are indicated in the statistics elsewhere shown in this issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

Of 168,000,000 acres of Texas soil more than 67 per cent is farm land, 28 per cent improved, worth four and a half billions of dollars, which is the third valuation of farm property among the states. Texas leads all states in the value of farm products, the latest official figure being $1,119,000,000.

Cotton is the leading crop, being nearly 40 per cent of all the cotton produced in the United States. Corn, oats, wheat, barley, rice, peanuts, hay, sorghum and a great variety of fruits and other farm products swell the rich annual yield of the state.

Texas is rejoicing as this is being written because of sousing Spring rains, the forerunner of bumper yields.

No longer does the Texas cowboy ride whooping into town on his mustang, except in the movies. "Down home" he rides to the village in a motor car and he and his fellow citizens buy at the rate of 14,047 new cars per month. Automobile owners in Texas contribute $11,000,000 annually to construct and maintain good roads.

Nothing is so surprising to the eye of the visitor as the "forests of oil derricks" at nearly 20,000 wells. Texas produces more than 160,000,000 barrels of petroleum per year, a gush each day valued at approximately $700,000. This is one-seventh of the world's supply. The value of oil-producing, transporting and refining properties within Texas is estimated at $750,000,000. This includes 72 refineries, handling half a million barrels of crude oil per day, coming from the United States, Mexico and South America. Oil has been produced from the breast of Texas for 60 years and the treasure that still exists beneath her surface is beyond calculation.

Sulphur, coal, lignite, clay products, asphalt, cement, natural gas, limestone, salt, granite, mineral waters, quicksilver, lime, plaster, lead, fuller's earth, silver and small quantities of gold are other mineral resources.

ISAIAH

CHAPTER XIV. 25.

That frustrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad; that turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolish.

The chief supply of helium gas, which may some day give all mankind a ride in the clouds on heavier-than-air craft, is supplied by this state.

The material facts concerning every important community in the Lone Star State are furnished in other pages of this issue. The newspaper and advertising statistics are also revealed for the benefit of the representatives of big business who attend this convention or stay at home, but who must, wherever they may be, reckon with this huge state which challenges the admiration of the world for its civic triumphs and material power. No business man making the trip to Houston can fail to receive new inspiration from fresh impressions of America's greatness. From the tropical Rio Grande to the softly chilling hills of the Upper Panhandle your Texan and his wife value the amenities and hospitality is a grace never neglected. Houston and the circle-tour cities will give the apostles of advertising warm welcome.

If the product is so good for newspapers why don't ordinary press agents sell this stuff at space rates and extraordinary "public relations experts" levy substantial flat rates for their one-eyed authorship.

BUSINESS IS GOOD

PRODUCTION in basic industries in March was as large as at any time in 1924. Distribution of merchandise, both at retail and wholesale, was in greater volume than a year ago. Sales in department stores and through mail order houses slightly decreased. The volume of bank loans and investments continued at a high level during the five-week period ended April 15. Wholesale prices of most commodities declined somewhat in March but owing to an advance in food prices, particularly meats, the general price level remained practically unchanged.

These business facts were given out this week by the Federal Reserve Bank, of New York. There had been a report in advertising circles that business conditions were less favorable than a year ago, but there appears to be no basis for such talk.

PHILADELPHIA IN 1926

MANY years have gone toward preparations inc dent to the dignified presentation of Philade phia's invitation to the Associated Advertisir Clubs of the World to make that city the scene organized advertising's international convention 1926.

As soon as civic leaders began to discuss possibiliti of a Sesquicentennial Exposition, celebrating the 150 anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, a vertising men in the city William Penn founded start to make arrangements for including a representatic of modern advertising in the celebration plans. Thu the bid is to be made on behalf of Philadelphia the Houston meeting.

The Poor Richard Club of Philadelphia, one of tl largest advertising organizations within the A. C. W., has formulated a powerful argument to tu the feet of the advertising pilgrims towards Philade phia. Sentiment also enters into this call. "Come your Philadelphia," the Club's invitation reads. "Phi adelphia, as the birthplace of your nation, belongs you as well as to us, who live within its boundaries "Philadelphia in 1926!"

When Philadelphia calls she means it.

A BROKEN ARM

BUREAUCRACY has driven publicity out of t back door of the Federal Trade Commissic Now watch masked men climb through the wi dow. The new rules make it possible for any sma lawyer to patch up any kind of trade villainy. Wit out publicity the commission is nothing that any cc rupt business need fear. One of the strongest leg arms that has even been extended to protect hon commerce has been broken.

Advertising men do not join the chorus of thank giving. Advertising men are on record for "truth and all that goes with truth, and no truthful trader h ever needed to fear the Federal Trade Commission its publicity.

Newspapers cover Texas!

ORNAMENTING JOURNALISM

THE investigating reporter came into full recc nition in the Pulitzer prize awards for 1924, a EDITOR & PUBLISHER rejoices therein.

Two youngsters, Alvin Goldstein and J. W. Mulr who wear black hats pulled down over the left e and take assignments seriously, by unanimous conse of the jury received $1,000 for the best example a reporter's work for their service, while in the empl of the Chicago Daily News, in assisting the authorit to solve the Robert Franks murder mystery.

There are two schools of thought on this subje those who believe that the function of a newspap should merely be that of recording the news as it found, and those who hold that a newspaper is institution actively devoted to the welfare of the publ

If Messrs. Goldstein and Mulroy had gone out an office where the former policy was in operati they would have contented themselves with pol hand-outs.

Coming from the enterprising Chicago Daily Nev with certain knowledge that the city editor of th newspaper expected something better from them th work that a bright office boy might do, they tackl the job man-fashion and their shrewd investigation l to the establishment of the crime of murder, identific tion of the remains, prevention of a ransom payme and a statement and clews which positively connect Loeb and Leopold with the atrocity for which th were later convicted.

Would a public official be honored for playing su a part in a public cause? Indeed, he would be hero. The two newspaper reporters are more her in the role, because they worked without the adva tages of police authority. The newspaper which e ployed them to thus serve the public interest h established a new bond of confidence among the peo who read it. It is something more than a blotter current events. It is a factor in the great soc order that makes American life rank at the top civilization.

FOLKS WORTH KNOWING

BEGINNING his newspaper career on a little weekly paper in his native town, Columbia, Mo., when he was still in his "teens," J. P. Baumgartner, editor and general manager of the Santa Ana (Cal.) Daily Register, has achieved signal success. He went to California in 1877 and has aided in building up four daily newspapers, the Riverside Press, the Pasadena Star (now the Star-News), the Long Beach Press (now the Press-Telegram) and the Santa Ana Register.

J. P. BAUMGARTNER

The Register, which Mr. Baumgartner still owns and manages, is published in a town of less than 30,000 population, situated within 35 miles of Los Angeles. For the past ten years (with the exception of 1922 and 1923) it has been the only daily paper published in Santa Ana, the county seat of Orange county.

The Register is a standard eight-column paper of 16 to 28 pages, with full U. P. and N. E. A. services.

Almost without a break for twenty-five years, Mr. Baumgartner represented California in the National Editorial Association, and is a past president of that association, having been elected to its presidency at New Orleans in 1908. He had always been and is still active in State Editorial Association work, having served five years as president of the Southern California Editorial Association.

ADVERTISING AGENCY AFFAIRS

Ramsay to Start Own Advertising Agency—Doremus Joins Rudolph Guenther-Russell Law, Inc.—Owen F. Thompson Promoted

ROBERT E. RAMSAY, author of "Constructive Merchandising," "Effective Direct Advertising," and "Effective House Organs," who for the last four years has been vice-president of James F. Newcomb & Co., Inc., of New York, announces his retirement from that concern as of August 1, 1925. Shortly after that date Mr. Ramsay will head his own organization specializing in the planning and production of direct advertising and house organs.

Mr. Ramsay has for nine years been a member of the Board of Governors of the Direct Mail Advertising Association. Aside from the further statement that his new concern would be located in New York City, no additional facts could be learned at this time.

H. W. Doremus, formerly senior partner of Doremus & Morse, specialists in financial advertising, has become associated with Rudolph Guenther-Russell Law, Inc. Mr. Doremus was one of the pioneers in the development of advertising in Wall street, having been one of the organizers of Doremus & Co. in 1903 and its first president.

Owen F. Thompson has been promoted to the position of treasurer of Walz-Weinstock, Inc., Buffalo advertising agency.

Joseph F. O'Connell of the O'Connell-Ingalls Advertising agency recently addressed the Lowell (Mass.) Rotary club on the subject, "Behind the Scenes in National Advertising."

Marsh & Stephens, Chicago agency is moving from 36 South State street to the new Tribune Tower.

T. W. LeQuatte has resigned as vice-president of the Potts-Turnbull Company, Chicago.

E. M. Abbott, formerly associated with Henri, Hurst & McDonald, has joined Williams & Cunnyngham, Chicago, as a member of the research department.

Ralph D. Allum, formerly chief of the copy department of Ruthrauff & Ryan, Inc., is now with Lord & Thomas, Chicago.

John A. Dickson, secretary of Mitchell-Faust Advertising Company, Chicago, has just returned from a three months' European trip.

WHAT'S WHAT IN THE FEATURE FIELD

King Features Handling Sevier's Horse Racing Series—Irvin Cobb Signs Contract with Bell—Bret Harte's Grandson Drawing for Newspapers

KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC., New York, announced this week that starting May 10, national distribution would be given to O'Neil Sevier's series of weekly articles on thoroughbreds, racing, and breeding news.

For close to thirty years, Sevier has been a racing reporter and a contributor to leading magazines. He was at one time in full charge of racing news on the New York Evening Sun and later covered the same field for the New York Globe. At various times in his career, he has written special stories of turf events for the New York American, the New York Telegraph, the Philadelphia Inquirer, the Cincinnati Enquirer, the Washington Post, the Baltimore American, the Montreal Gazette and many other newspapers. He was one of the organizers of the American Remount Association.

Irvin Cobb has signed a new contract with the Bell Syndicate, Inc., to furnish an entirely new series of weekly humorous articles for newspapers. The series will start next fall.

"The First Story I Have Heard Today," is the title of a new daily feature by Will Rogers which is being offered by the McNaught Syndicate, Inc., New York. It is illustrated with a one column sketch.

Bret Harte Jr., grandson of Bret Harte, famous American short story writer, is supplying Readers Syndicate, Inc., New York, with a daily comic art feature under the title "Phoney Photos."

Helen Will, 19-year-old tennis champion, will make her debut as a newspaper writer May 10, with a series of tennis articles, written for King Features Syndicate, Inc. The articles are scheduled to appear twice-a-week. Miss Wills will write of current or coming tennis events, her own impressions of court tactics and styles of play, and how she regards champions and championship possibilities.

Henry M. Snevily, general manager of the Bell Syndicate, Inc., left New York this week on a two months' trip to the Pacific Coast and return.

"Tales of Childhood" is the new title of the daily articles by Dr. Loyal Crane on child psychology, issued by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate, New York.

Graham Hunter, formerly of the Chicago Tribune, is creator of "Jolly Jingles" a new two column strip or panel, handled by Readers Syndicate, Inc., New York. The same syndicate announces a symposium by twelve noted novelists on the "Women of Today and Tomorrow." Among contributors to the symposium are W. L. George, Edna Ferber, Ida Clyde Clark, Fannie Hurst, Harvey O'Higgins, and Rex Beach.

"Fatty Lewis" a weekly illustrated domestic human interest feature, for several years run by the Kansas City Star, has been taken over for national distribution by the McNaught Syndicate, Inc., New York. Arthur F. Killick is the author.

CIRCULATION PROGRESS

"Get the Paper to the People While News Is Hot"—Hall

KARL F. HALL

"OPPORTUNIST" is a term that may be used with a derogatory inference. But "opportunist," as applied to Karl F. Hall, circulation manager of the Newark (N. J.) Star-Eagle, describes one of the qualities that has made him successful in the newspaper circulation field.

Hall believes that when a story "breaks" that will interest a large number of readers it is his job to see that these readers are enabled to read this story and read it in the Star-Eagle. His organization has been trained to "get the paper to the people," and especially give service in the district immediately concerned with or affected by the particular item of news. This, of course, is done without delaying the distribution of papers to regular subscribers, delivery on time and in good condition being one of his hobbies.

An early start in newspaper work and a steady climb through the various places in the circulation department have given Hall a thorough understanding of the possibilities and problems of his work. He started with a "corner" in Toledo, O., when 12 years old. An increase from nothing to 125 papers first attracted the attention of the circulation men of the paper he sold. He worked on the Toledo Press, Toledo News Bee and the Toledo Blade. From assistant circulation manager of the Blade, he went to the Detroit Journal as circulation manager. After the consolidation of the Journal with the Detroit News he became circulation manager of the Star Eagle.

His theory is that a circulation staff should above all things be adaptable.

California Weekly "Gives It a Whirl" and Writes "30"

The Monterey Park (Cal.) Progress, which has been published as a weekly, started as a daily April 27, and on April 28, discontinued as a daily and reverted to the weekly field. Lack of advertising support was given as the cause. On the second and last day of publishing as a daily, the paper, consisting of two pages, carried the leading headline: "Daily Experiment Is Failure." Border rules were turned, and an "obituary" notice set in a box read as follows:

"The death occurred today of the Monterey Park Daily Progress. Malnutrition was the cause. The infant was born Monday and came into the world with a lusty shout. Food was shut off by the merchants on Tuesday, however, and the baby died of starvation. Rest in peace."

On the second page of the newspaper were only these words, surrounded by a black border: "This space was for sale. Nobody wanted it. Good-night. 30."

Critic and Wife on Trip Abroad

John Anderson, dramatic critic of the New York Evening Post, and his wife, Margaret Breuning, who is art critic of the same newspaper, will sail from New York, May 16, on a six weeks' pleasure trip to France.

Groat Returning from Berlin Post

Carl Groat, formerly manager of the Berlin Bureau of the United Press Associations, will arrive in New York from Berlin, May 15. He has been succeeded in Germany by Frederick Kuh, formerly U. P. SERVICE TO PUBLISHERS, as we see it, means much more than merely getting business. That, of course, is important, but the caring for it, keeping it giving satisfaction, preventing mistakes that work harm, all enter into the service we render.

There are hundreds of ways, some of them seemingly unimportant, others of supreme importance, where we find chances to do things for publishers which increase revenue and make standing with advertisers — standing that counts.

U. S. NOT PERSECUTING TRADE ASSOCIATIONS

Charges That Government Is Hampering Work of These Groups Through Anti-Trust Law Groundless Says C. of C. Official

Charges that the government in the administration of the anti-trust laws is persecuting trade associations organized for the common benefit of their members were characterized as groundless by E. W. McCullough, manager of the Department of Manufacture of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, in an address today before the Glass Containers Association in Atlantic City, April 30.

"The Sherman law," said Mr. McCullough, "was enacted nearly 35 years ago, and since that time the actual prosecutions brought against trade associations have not averaged one a year. Up until March, 1922, there were exactly 34. When you consider the tremendous increase in the volume of business since the Sherman law was enacted and the really small number of cases which have been brought against trade associations, there are no grounds for charges of persecution."

"Control by agreement," Mr. McCullough added, "has been a failure ever since the first attempts were made to exercise it in business. For a time the so-called gentlemen's agreements or understandings seemed to accomplish their purpose, but in competitive trades the conditions surrounding the plant and trade of each manufacturer are so different that the time arrives sooner or later when such agreements could not be kept without sacrificing the business, and right then and there the break occurs and there are charges of bad faith.

"The nearest I believe we can come to legitimate control; that is, restriction which is entirely right and lawful, is that which may be imposed individually through dependable information and intelligence. A business man who actually knows the dividing line between profit and loss will not knowingly sell at a loss, at least for any length of time. Intelligent competitors make the best competition, for it is always the man who doesn't know and is guessing who foments trouble. Therefore, the chief function of a trade association should be the education and information of its members.

"The Chamber of Commerce of the United States has not been unmindful of the desire of trade associations to secure authoritative pronouncements as to many of their common activities, and in 1923 issued to its membership Referendum No. 41, containing eight propositions regarding the relations of trade associations with government. Among them were the following of most vital concern:

"1. That it is proper that trade associations should exist for each important branch of industry and commerce;

"2. That a trade association should be prepared to consider all problems affecting the general advance of its industry or branch of commerce;

"3. That statistics of capacity, production, stocks and sales should be collected by a trade association for its industry or branch of commerce;

"4. That trade associations should continue free from special forms of government control;

"5. That statistics of actual prices in closed transactions should be collected by a trade association for its industry or branch of commerce;

"6. That statistics of capacity, production, stocks, sales and prices a trade association should make as available to the public and to government agencies interested in following the course of industry and commerce as to its members.

"All of these were approved by an overwhelming majority of the organization members of the Chamber and its executive officers, and they are continuing to advocate these mandates in their contacts with government officials and departments.

"The government is not given to prosecution of business organizations on mere technicalities, judging by the past, but on premeditated or wilful violation."

SONGS OF THE CRAFT

(Written Exclusively for Editor & Publisher*)*

By Henry Edward Warner

TO ADOLPH S. OCHS

When I was a kid in a one-horse town that is anchored in Moccasin Bend,
A town that is hugged in the Tennessee's flow to the Gulf at the country's end,
I had fixed my star where a chunky man sat at a desk that was always clean,
And I wondered how all the things he knew could be packed in a single bean!

I would watch him work, I could hear him think! . . . And I dreamed that the time might be
When some other cub with a hope like mine might set his star on me!
I studied my star with a wishful heart; I builded by castles fair . . .
I builded my castles of mist o' dreams . . . and I left my conquests there!

The star of my kid days ran undimm'd the course of its Fates, and gleamed
Brighter and brighter, and farther off, while the cub in his castle dreamed! . . .
And the kid still sits, when the night is fair, watching the stars march by,
And the star of his youth is the brightest light that shines in the crowded sky!

SCIENCE SERVICE OFFICERS

Dr. Finley and Mark Sullivan Are Trustees at Annual Meeting

Dr. John H. Finley, associate editor of the New York Times, and Mark Sullivan, Washington correspondent and author, joined the board of trustees of Science Service at its annual meeting last week at Washington. They are representatives of the journalistic profession on the governing board of this specialized syndicate organized with the backing of scientific institutions for the popularization of science and the aid of newspapers in obtaining interesting and authentic accounts of scientific progress.

Dr. Victor C. Vaughan, formerly president of the American Medical Association, also became a member of the board.

Dr. William E. Ritter was re-elected president, Dr. Vernon Kellogg, permanent secretary of the National Research Council, was chosen vice-president, Dr. J. McKeen Cattell, editor of Science, was elected treasurer.

Substantial progress in the magnitude and scope of the operations of Science Service was reported by Dr. Edwin E. Slosson, director, and Watson Davis, managing editor, who were chosen to supervise the work of the institution for another year. Mr. Davis was also re-elected secretary of the corporation.

N. Y. Telegram-Mail Instructs in Drawing Caricatures

"Radio-catures," an innovation in radio, were presented recently through Station WOR, Newark, N. J., by the New York Telegram and Evening Mail.

On a special graph published in four-column size in the Telegram-Mail, the amateur caricaturist at home draws at the direction of the announcer at the station. Abril Lamarque, the Cuban caricaturist of the Telegram-Mail staff, is the designer and creator of "Radio-catures." He draws in his studio each week a caricature in his own straight-line style of the person most prominent in the news of the week, and hands this caricature, arranged for the chart, to Warren Nolan, of the Telegram-Mail, who actually directs the radio-caturists in their homes through the microphone at Station WOR.

Mayor Hylan was the subject of the first radio-cature, and the correct reproduction next day.

Where do you want your advertising to go?

A startling change in the New York newspaper situation

SOMETIME ago The New York Herald Tribune announced that it had the largest weekday circulation in New York's Suburban Zone of any morning newspaper of standard size. Thus the most successful consolidation in the history of American newspapers attained circulation supremacy in the richest territory of substantial homes in this or any country.

This circulation supremacy in a territory containing 8.4% of the population who own 10.5% of the wealth of this nation, is causing an advertising shift in New York's morning newspapers.

This supremacy is proof, if any were needed, that The New York Herald Tribune in retaining in its entirety the circulation of two strong and influential newspapers has built a body of readers unexcelled in purchasing power. A body of readers wholhave been pleased by the completeness of its news and the unequalled excellence of its features.

Early in the consolidation a great many advertisers everywhere recognized the immense power to purchase behind the large quantity of quality circulation, and, in consequence of such recognition, The Herald Tribune for the year 1924 had a gain of 3,700,000 lines of advertising,—the largest gain of any newspaper in the country.

This recognition grows; the shift continues; and for the month of April, 1925, The Herald Tribune made the largest advertising gain of any New York newspaper.

These advertising gains are a tribute to the worth and responsiveness of this great body of substantial readers.

Net paid daily circulation in excess of 270,000

Net paid Sunday circulation in excess of 300,000

These circulation facts and these advertising facts make The New York Herald Tribune the logical keystone for a successful advertising campaign in the World's Greatest Market.

MANUFACTURERS FIND PROFIT IN CULTIVATING HOME TERRITORY

Wholesale Firms Using Local Newspapers to Build Sales in Own Door-Year and Discover It Is Worth While

By HAMMOND EDWARD FRANKLIN

MUST a manufacturer be a "prophet without honor" in his own home town?

The local retail merchant is expected as a matter of course to be a candidate for regular or occasional space, but many a local manufacturer is too busy cultivating green pastures over the hills and far away to realize that in his own door-yard is a market especially worth cultivating.

The market is inexpensive to cover. The salesmen need roll up no fancy expense accounts to round up the local retail merchants, who should be more friendly toward a local concern than to strangers. There is no routing of merchandise, no freight to pay, perhaps no middlemen to have to give a slice of profit to in this local field. The residents probably already know something about the factory, the men who run it, and the products made, but not enough. The factory pays large local taxes, it furnishes a living to numerous citizens. Why shouldn't they and their friends buy what it produces?

In most cases the manufacturer has given little thought to the local field. It has seemed small in comparison with the country as a whole. Yet the prospects in his town differ in number and degree not at all from millions like them in other communities. Some day he may want more working capital. It would be advantageous at such a time to have his community fellows furnish this. His banker also is a fellow resident whose confidence is worth cultivating.

Right in the town is one or more good, thoroughly read newspaper covering it like a blanket. Why shouldn't he be using the local press to sell himself and his line to his home town just as much as he tries to do outside through newspaper or other forms of advertising? Certainly, the local newspaper will cooperate with him to the limit as a matter of local pride. But first of all the man behind the local newspaper must win the head of the factory over to the idea.

The M. S. Wright Company of Worcester, Mass., is carrying on a newspaper campaign which should inspire many another campaign similar in principle. In and around its factory is a trading population the company has decided is worth special attention. The firm is the oldest of all vacuum cleaner makers. It makes the Sweeper-Vac, which has been advertised widely in women's magazines.

The headline says, "Sweeper-Vac—Remember it as a home product." A picture of the factory is shown as also is a woman using the product, and a quotation of the opinion of the Modern Priscilla Proving Plant. The copy states:

"To Worcester goes the honor of having the oldest maker of vacuum cleaners. Since 1908 more than a million homes all over the world have enjoyed the comfort and labor-saving of this Worcester-made cleaner. From Maine to California and on every continent the Sweeper-Vac electric cleaner is giving complete satisfaction.

"We have in the Sweeper-Vac, made by your neighbors at the M. S. Wright plant, a vacuum cleaner which without exaggeration will do more house-cleaning for you than any other cleaner you can buy. It is far more than an excellent rug cleaner; it is for every house-cleaning task.

"All, particularly residents of Worcester, are welcome to visit our factory on Fremont street. And if you're interested to see what a Sweeper-Vac complete with its attachments and exclusive electric Vac-Mop can do to make your house-cleaning easier, call or phone, not the factory, but any of the stores below for a free home demonstration."

This disposes adroitly of the usual objection of the manufacturer that he doesn't want to advertise for he doesn't want to be bothered with people who try to buy at retail. He can state plainly, as this company has done, that he does not ask for any direct response at the factory, but give the names of specific local dealers who will be glad to make the sale or supply further information. This at the same time strengthens his position with the local merchants who will give liberal window display space and counter room.

A prominent oil stove maker, using a big list of newspapers, includes his town, where the dealers loyally purchase much tie-up space, duly encouraged by the evening newspaper publisher. If there are several good papers, the manufacturer should use them all even if outside he uses one paper to a city.

"Keep the home brands burning" pleads co-operative advertising of eight brands of cigars, "Keep New England's cigar industry on the map":

"The spirit of the old colonial shoemakers, 'Good work and pride in it,' is still alive; it is the spirit of New England's cigar industry today.

"Over fifty thousand people are dependent upon New England's cigar industry. Eighty million dollars are invested with an annual payroll of over eight million dollars. In 1924 New England cigar manufacturers paid to the United States treasury nearly six million dollars for import duty and stamp tax alone.

"New England cigars, made by highly paid skilled workmen, from the choicest Havana and Sumatra tobaccos, cost more to manufacture but are sold at retail at the same price as ordinary cigars of inferior quality and workmanship.

"If you live in New England and are interested in her welfare, help to keep New England's cigar industry in New England. Buy New England made cigars."

The copy is the work of the J. P. Cox Advertising Agency, Boston. It typifies a form of co-operative newspaper advertising to the home market which could be applied to many other lines in many sections.

The telephone company occasionally advertises local demonstrations of how it operates.

When C. A. B. Zook bought the Pennsylvania Soap Company of Lancaster, Pa., a plant in operation since 1849, he brought in new executive timber, completely modernized the factory and increased its capacity and then set to work to decide what his sales policy would be. It was necessary to give dealers their fair margin, yet take care of rather high producing costs due to quality of materials used.

The new management concentrated upon an area within 200 miles of the factory, maintaining first quality and making prompt deliveries. Local newspaper advertising, listing dealers where the line was on sale, and telling the public "There's a Pensco dealer in your neighborhood" was used as well as copy giving the features of the various soaps. Some dealers clipped out the copy and pasted it on their windows. Billboards also were used.

Special deals were offered the merchants. As a special stunt an airplane distributed certificates which entitled the bearers to a cake of Penso Penn-Olive Soap free at dealers, who were given a cash rebate.

It is reported this company has been able to intrench itself strongly in its home field by "commencing at the commencement."

For any product that has servicing of any kind, the area surrounding the factory makes a logical sales territory to go after.

In the case of a new piece of merchandise, its chances of acceptance somewhere else are better if the creator can point to a real success in his home field.

Recently an advertising agent addressed the salesman of a manufacturer about plans for the coming season in advertising. The superintendent of the factory was so impressed with the talk that he asked the agent to give the same talk before all factory department heads to inspire them with keeping up the quality to back up the claims of the advertising.

This is a problem which nearly every plant has. If indifference can be fanned to enthusiasm, the product improves. Advertising in the local paper is sure to be read by the factory workers. The interest on their part it arouses will prove one of many valuable by-products.

When clean, sound policies and a virile species of aggressiveness have formed the foundation for a newspaper, its growth, the piling up of its circulation, the completion of its entire super-structure is bound to keep pace with the times. This sort of growth, not being spasmodic, is sound, consistent and a definite indication of a paper's prestige. Therein lies the story of The Cleveland News.

FOSTER SCORES SUPPRESSION

We began our fight with editorials of denunciation. We called upon our governor, our courts and our officers to enforce the law and to punish the criminals. The only effect, temporarily, was a rush of orders to "stop my paper;" our daily mail was flooded with letters of hate and threats of dire vengeance. In my own case, for two long years they forced me to have an armed guard around my office and at my home. They circulated every character of vile report about myself and our paper.

Did we stop? We did not. Never a day passed that we did not expose and denounce them. How did it finally end? By our realizing that it was war, and that we must adopt the tactics of war. We hired some of their own men to secretly become our reporters and to publish verbatim reports of their meetings behind closed doors. We told when, where they met, whether on the bleak prairies, behind closed doors or in hidden forests. We gave the names of those who attended. We secured the assistance of a few conscientious attorneys. Several of the criminals were arrested and sent to the penitentiary. But the main weapon we used was the publishing of names. No man of any reputation whatever wanted the world to know that he was connected with such an order. As long as they could secretly slip into a hall, or confer behind closed doors they were neither afraid nor ashamed, but when the white light of publicity was thrown upon them they ceased to attend meetings. The membership dwindled.

You can't tell the people of Texas today that crime must be hidden, or not exposed. They know better.

Now I have reached my final text and will conclude these rambling thoughts, "As water spilled on the ground which cannot be gathered up again."

Was there ever a more striking comparison? Dash a bucket of water upon the dry ground; how quickly it disappears. "All the king's horses and all the king's men" cannot gather it up again.

O, men of the press, waste not your words. Do not throw them forth recklessly. Do not scatter them upon the printed page without thought of their future.

Words that are useless, words that are wasted, are as much of a menace to our profession as words that are filled with suggestiveness—with hate, envy or malice.

Just 26 little letters in that alphabet for our use, and yet think of the thousands of words we have formed from them. All that brain of man can conceive of truth, faith and reverence. In these 26 little letters lie all the records of the past and all the possibilities of the future. All history, all art, all the sciences. Without them we would be as beasts of the field; with them and by them we may have hope of immortality.

So in conclusion let me again warn you to watch your words. Spill them not as water dashed upon the ground, which no man may gather up again. rather make them as the blessed rain which brings new life to the earth.

Make them an honor to the profession, so that you may at all times come to the defense of that institution—the daily newspaper. Men may hate and men may revile us. Great interests may seek to undermine the influence of the press. And yet it is the one thing on which the people must depend. Things of evil hunt for darkness. Men who fear neither the law nor the courts shrink from newspaper publicity. "What will the paper say?" is their haven cry. It is the only thing many fear. If they can weaken confidence in the press of the country, they will have accomplished their purpose. God help the people if they ever succeed.

FURAY DISCUSSES GROWTH OF FOREIGN INTEREST IN AMERICAN NEWS

JAMES H. FURAY, vice-president of the United Press in charge of foreign services, in an address at Journalism Week at the University of Missouri, May 7, after referring in general terms to the work of foreign correspondents abroad, discussed the growth of the service of world news by American press associations to foreign countries.

"Since the war," he said, "foreign countries have revealed a strong and increasing interest in news about America as well as in American news enterprise. Not only news of America but the American viewpoint, American reaction to political and other situations in foreign lands became intensely interesting to the people of those foreign lands.

"To meet the demand which that interest has created during the past ten years forward-looking American press associations and news agencies in recent years have organized and developed what has been aptly described as a foreign news export department. That is precisely what it is—the exportation of news of the United States and the world to other countries of the world.

"There is scarcely anything in modern journalism, national and international, so unexampled and so far-reaching as the growth of American news service abroad. To illustrate, it is only necessary to say that during the last year the United Press world news service—direct service to newspapers and not through the medium of local or national news agencies—has been inaugurated in Germany, Austria, Hungary, Czecho-Slovakia, the Free City of Danzig, Switzerland, Spain and Santo Domingo, none of which had previously received a regular news report direct from an American news agency; and during the past nine years that world report has gone into 21 foreign countries. Thus the newspaper readers of 21 countries, whose numbers run far into the millions, are daily receiving their world news from this organization.

"There is much food for thought and a strong appeal to the imagination in this. A service to foreign countries that was nearly non-existent ten years ago to-day reaches practically every important country on the globe. An exporter said not long ago that he regarded the rapid growth and spread of the delivery by this organization of news service to foreign countries as one of the most amazing facts of recent years in what he called American exportation. But let us not forget that what is exported, if you prefer that word, is not goods, not collars or wheat or meat, but news, recent intelligence, facts."

He referred to the fact that the great network of world communications was never in such active use as to-day in the exchange of news and that this was bringing the peoples of the world in closer news contact with each other.

"Some American editors believe that their readers do not care for foreign news, are not interested in it excepting only the barest outline," he said. "It has been said that, as a rule, most Americans do not read news from abroad because they do not understand it. I am unable to agree entirely with that viewpoint. Of course it is possible to print too much foreign news, just as it is possible to print too much crime news. But there is a happy medium which many editors have attained and which gives their papers a more even balance insofar as foreign news is concerned. Foreign countries, especially European countries, are certainly closer to America than they were before the war and what goes on in Europe undoubtedly has a more direct bearing on American life than it did in past years. The war not only changed the geography of Europe; it disturbed and shifted the economic center of gravity of the world. Europe looks to America not only for leadership, but for many other things. All of this would seem to affect our lives in one way or another; and there does not seem to be any real reason why foreign news of all kinds will not be very interesting to the average American newspaper reader and readily understood by him if intelligently handled and interpreted."

HARRISON DISCUSSES "DOES A FIGHTING EDITORIAL POLICY PAY?"

The question of a fighting editorial policy for newspapers was considered in detail by Walter M. Harrison, managing editor of the Oklahoma City Daily Oklahoman and Times, in an address this week before students and editors gathered for the Sixteenth Annual Journalism Week of the University of Missouri.

Mr. Harrison's address, quoted in part, follows:

"DOES a Fighting Editorial Policy Pay?"

On reflection I find that a subject seized in the desperation of haste requires definition. Two words in the caption may be misunderstood. At the outset I think we had better define "fight" and "pay."

By "fighting" I mean a fearless, true, continuing editorial presentation of argument and facts against a constitutional, political or moral wrong inflicted on an individual, a community or a nation, by an individual, corporation, party, or government.

Now, what do I mean by the word—"pay?" Simply this—financial and spiritual returns. The two go hand in hand.

No man fit to wear the honorable title of editor can dissemble, cheat or blackmail his way to a temporary money success and be proud of it. Financial success follows virtue in the editorial page and news column.

Adolph Ochs, publisher of the New York Times, recently was quoted as making the statement that the first duty of a newspaper is to make money. I agree with him. You cannot be both owned and free. If you are not making money, you owe money. If you are in debt, the bank, the gas company, the cotton mills, the steel crowd or some other power rings a bell and you answer. And so the first duty of a newspaper is to make money in order that it may be absolutely free to champion the causes based on moral and principle, on which every enduring newspaper success is established.

Fighting for principle pays what Dr. Henry Van Dyke calls durable satisfactions—an honored place in the community—the friendship of men, women and children—sound sleep—conscious knowledge of one's best effort devoted to the advancement of humanity.

I wish to take you on a trip with me to the desks of the editorial executives of a few of today's outstanding ethical successes.

I want you to meet first Mr. George E. Miller, editor-in-chief of the Detroit News, great in prestige, great in business success, who thinks a fighting editorial policy is the best.

"I would say we are for it," Mr. Miller says. "But behind it we have a fundamental upon which our policy rests and of which every man on this staff is an advocate, if he is truly a member of the staff. That is, always before we begin to fight, to search for the moral issue involved. If we find a question which carries such an issue, then our course is plain—find the right side of that issue and go to it.

"On that basis the fighting editorial policy is an easy thing to carry out, for every man fights best when he feels him-

1924 Was a Great Year for One of These United States, for It Showed Income Tax Gains Only $11,583,455 Behind Those Made in the Los Angeles District!

[One State and the Los Angeles Internal Revenue District Alone Showed Income Tax Return Gains for 1924, Over the Record Year of 1920]

ADVERTISERS want to know where the money is; where the whole people is wealthy, as well as the few; where folks can afford to buy the things that are advertised without stinting themselves. There is no determining factor for these questions of ability to buy that can even begin to rank with the reports of the income tax collector.

And that report, for the period ending March 15, 1925, shows that the Los Angeles district paid $12,425,455 more in income tax returns for 1924 than it did in the banner year of 1920 when money seemed literally to be growing on bushes.

That report shows that only one other district in this great nation enjoyed a gain over the same period:—and that district was an entire state against the Los Angeles district's ten counties.

The Los Angeles gain was 35 per cent; the Nation's decrease was 54 per cent over the year in which returns reached the highest point in history.

There have been income tax reductions since 1920. If there had not been, the returns here would have shown an increase of 69 per cent!

And these are not boosters' figures! They are not padded. Nobody pads his income tax returns. These are earned income tax payments, and represent a degree of prosperity unparalleled in the country.

Here Is Money With Which to Buy!

NUMBER of returns filed for different years in Los Angeles Internal Revenue District since 1919:

1919	110,834
1920	155,126
1921	176,950
1922	230,682
1923	273,553
1924.....(Estimated).....	280,000

For comparative purposes it should be kept in mind that thousands not now required to file under the less-than-$2500-limit clause, would, according to the best estimates available, have made the real increase between 1924 and 1923, 46,447, instead of only 6447, as shown.

A true barometer of growing wealth and population, and a certain indication of where America's white spot is located . . . . . .

Los Angeles is the place to advertise what you have to sell, because here people have money and can buy. The Los Angeles Examiner offers the largest morning and Sunday circulation west of St. Louis, and a merchandising service that will help put your goods on the dealers' shelves before a line of advertising appears.

HARRISON DISCUSSES FIGHTING POLICY

self to be on the side of right opposed to wrong."

"Thrice armed is he who finds his quarrel just."

One of the most presumptuous of modern critics of the daily newspaper has branded the Kansas City Star as the biggest Main street, George Q. Babbitt type of chamber-of-commerce newspaper in the country.

The tremendous financial success of the Star and its far-flung editorial prestige is the best answer to the cynic's conclusion. Here is the best demonstration that I know, of a newspaper which rolls along from year to year, gaining greater momentum without the leadership of the fighting figure who launched it, William R. Nelson.

I think it was Villard who said of Nelson that "he loved a drink, a steak, a story, and a fight." He also loved fair play, his fellowman, his city, his state and his country, and his active life was devoted to the development of that niche in the world which fate had given him through his newspapers.

The men on the Star today are going along the same road charted by William R. Nelson.

Come in with me to visit with Ralph Stout, the Star's managing editor.

"I am with you in advocating a fighting editorial policy for the newspaper," Mr. Stout says. "To me that is the real life of a daily publication. An editorial page which has not something of the militant spirit is to me, and I think to the great bulk of its readers, deadly.

"My view is that a newspaper has a duty to the public to accomplish things for the public good, and if it fills its columns with mushy, sentimental stuff and spineless opinion, it is failing to perform its chief function. Look over the history of the great journals which have been built up in this country, and, with scarcely an exception, you will find that their founders, the men who vitalized them, were constantly fighting for the public good.

"The great criticism of many newspapers, and to my mind a just criticism, is that many newspapers of the fighting type allow their enthusiasm for the cause they are advocating to color their news. This is all wrong. Of course, a newspaper is going to play up the thing it is for more than the things on which it is passive. The opinions, of course, belong to the editorial column. For my part, I would rather read a newspaper I disagreed with occasionally than one which had only flabby opinions."

Mr. Stout touches a most important point. If you want to gain a reputation for unfairness quickly, enter into a fight and print the news developments of one side only.

There was a time when I thought I sensed a definite anti-public utility bias in all Scripps-Howard newspapers. I am frank to say that I make no such criticism of those Scripps-Howard papers which come to my attention today. It may be that I am softened in my attitude toward this big chain of penny papers by a close, personal friendship and great admiration for the general editorial executive of this powerful and growing group, George B. Parker.

Let's drop in on Mr. Parker in his Cleveland office and see what he says about our question. Here it is:

"As I see it—

"There are two kinds of human personalities—positive and negative.

"It is not a matter of argument as to which gets ahead in the world.

"So there are the same two kinds of newspaper personalities. The positive thrives. The negative wanes.

"The positive man fights on occasion—or he wouldn't be positive.

"Likewise, the positive newspaper.

"Few rewards await the dull, drab, mouse-colored, negative human being.

"And equally few, that kind of a newspaper."

Parker at least practices what he preaches.

In Iowa newspaperdom the Des Moines Register sticks out like a sore thumb. Harvey Ingham, the editor, speaks with conviction that carries beyond the borders of the two great rivers that define his state.

"If a newspaper will avoid shibboleths which align people in fighting groups, it can advance any intelligent policy without losing its support. The one thing I warn every newspaper against is the editorial use of crowd shibboleths, thus, catholic, protestant, democrat are words to be used only when the writer has a very definite purpose, and then with great circumspection.

"Nine-tenths of all editorial difficulties are caused by arousing crowd prejudices when the purpose is to appeal to the common understanding. The tendency of all editorial writers is to stick in a word that stings. In that way quicker than in any other, an editorial loses its audience. A man can preach unitarianism in any orthodox pulpit in America if he does not tack on that name. But, speaking directly of an editorial policy, I have yet to see a really successful newspaper without one.

"The newspaper started in this country as a moulder of public opinion. I do not believe it can ever escape its inheritance."

Words of wisdom indeed. Here in a hundred words is sound editorial advice which every young editor well may analyze for hours.

If I were asked what one editor is doing more today than any other one to encourage the students of journalism in the United States I would say that man is Casper S. Yost, editor of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat and President of the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

Mr. Yost could not be called a militant journalist, nor yet an aggressive editor. I think he belongs to the judicial school. He speaks with the authority of long experience when he says:

"Should editorial policy be based upon 'pay' or upon 'right'? The editor is responsible to a degree for the material welfare of his paper but if he bases his policies solely upon the question of 'pay' in the money sense, they will not pay in that or in any other sense. But if by 'pay' is meant the attaining of that public respect and confidence which are the solid bases of the best newspaper property, then he should endeavor with all his ability to make it pay in that sense, and by so doing will make it pay in every sense.

"As to a fighting policy, the answer depends upon definition. When there is something worth while to fight for, then a fighting policy is demanded. But the paper which adopts a 'fighting' policy as a regular thing, which endeavors to keep a fight going all the time, is certain to become a common scold and a public nuisance. Frequent display of the fighting spirit is no more to be desired in a newspaper than in a man. The two gun press is an anachronism. The newspaper which discusses public questions with conviction and sincerity, and betrays evidences of thought in reaching its conclusions carries more weight than a score of tempermental sheets always in a bad humor about something or other."

"The two gun press is an anachronism." That sentence sticks with me after a study of Mr. Yost's remarks. And when you think of the town bully, of the plug-ugly in your home community who goes around town all of the time admirng his muscles and urging somebody to knock a chip off his shoulder, you will realize just how right this editor is in his denunciation of the "two gun press."

When I asked William Allen White to answer this question I, of course, expected to get a vigorous and an immediate "yes" with enough epigrammatic embroidery to make an interesting paper, but read his answer:

"I should say no. Militancy does not convince. A courageous policy pays but it must be courage tempered with kindness and tolerance and a realization that the other fellow also has his side. Fighting editorials are merely yelling in a rainbarrel; they seem to be making a bigger noise than they do. And a fighting editorial never gets very far."

William Allen White was born fighting. Brilliant and militant, he has been writing with short and ugly adjectives since he was old enough to peck a typewriter. Now, having passed the horizon of a successful life, today the best known small city editor in the United States, he says a fighting editorial policy does not pay.

Why, if William Allen White had not breathed the spirit of a crusader for righteousness from the launching of his editorial career, he would be submerged today in that great strata of concrete mediocrities which dares not lift an opinion against the main street masses lest it endanger a subscriber or cause the Emporium to cut its monthly lineage in two.

Mr. White must have been thinking of a fighting editorial policy in the terms of his recent unsuccessful campaign for the Governorship of Kansas, based upon his fight against the Ku Klux Klan. But that is a mean thought, knowing White as I do. I fancy he simply took the side of this question which is so unlike himself in order to cause you to wonder about it.

I am disappointed in not being able to give you an expression from one of the editors of the Pulitzer organization, which I consider the very highest type of fighting journalism in the world today. Reflected in the New York World and the St Louis Post Dispatch is found the living force of a man dead these many years, Joseph Pulitzer, who made a more lasting mark on the journalism of the United States than any other man whose name ever appeared on a masthead.

May I digress a moment to lay a verbal wreath on the tomb of the greatest of all independents, the first gad-fly of party government, always in politics up to the bridle, but never answerable to any politician, I wish I could ask the late Joseph Pulitzer to answer this question. I know what his answer would be. The World and the Post Dispatch today are running on the momentum of the reputation built by this son of Austria, who became as violent an American patriot as the Roosevelt he fought so bitterly.

The newspaper which loses courage as a result of defeat after fighting for a good cause had best sell out to new hands with stronger steels of character to face the new and endless fight against wrong.

BAKER ON CRITICS OF THE PRESS

"The tendency is more and more to pains taking effort in the presentation of our news. It must be truthful, it must be ably written, it must be so worth while in every way that the editors just cannot leave it out.

"There is today a greater editorial page than ever before, less bitter, less personal than that of old, but with a riper thought, a finer diction, a greater sincerity and honesty of purpose.

"Today there are specialists in important departments and this is growing more and more to be the rule both in the daily and in the vastly expanded Sunday edition.

"I predict that as the days go by we will have fewer newspapers and better, that we will learn to think more in world terms and not merely in terms of our own dooryard.

"The newspaper causes us all, whether we will or no, to virtually think of the same thing at the same moment, and crystallizes this mass thought into action. What the majority thinks and demands we call public opinion. If we deserve to lead, it becomes both our privilege and our duty to shape and crystallize this public opinion into action."

FULL PUBLICITY FOR TAX RETURNS UPHELD

U. S. Judge Affirms Decision of District Court Which Denied Injunction Restraining Publication of Tax Paid

Advocates of "pitiless publicity" for income tax returns won a signal victory Monday in the District of Columbia Court of Appeals.

Judge C. S. Hatfield, of the U. S. Court of Customs Appeals, who sat in the absence of Justice Charles H. Robb, held the publicity provision of the income tax law is validly within the legislative power of Congress and does not offend against the fourth admendment of the constitution.

Therefore Treasury officials may not be enjoined from carrying out the terms of the provision, according to Judge Hatfield's decision in the case of Gorham Hubbard, Boston merchant, who had appealed from a decision of the District Supreme Court in which he was denied an injunction against Secretary of the Treasury Andrew W. Mellon and Internal Revenue Commissioner David H. Blair.

Hubbard contended his right of privacy was violated by the publication of the amount of his income tax payment.

Judge Hatfield, in stating he was unable to agree with Hubbard, that the fourth amendment was violated, because there had been no search or seizure of his papers, or effects.

While it has been held that the constitutional guarantees of person and property should be liberally construed, the court points out, such guarantees cannot be extended to include alleged rights pertaining either to person or property, no matter how unwise or mischievous an act of Congress may appear to the aggrieved party.

The court called attention to the fact that there is no contention that Congress has not the right to require the divulging of the private affairs of the individual for income tax purposes, but only that the publicity provision is in violation of the Constitution.

The court stated:

"We are of the opinion that where Congress has the power to require the divulging of private information for a lawful purpose it has authority for the due and proper accomplishment of such purpose to require the giving of publicity to the information thus secured.

"It seems to us that the provisions for public inspection of lists containing the name and address of each person making an income tax return and the amount of tax paid by him were considered by Congress appropriate means of securing the enforcement of the income tax law, and that such provisions are plainly adapted to that end. They may cause many hardships and may prove to be injurious to many persons. It may develop that Congress was very unwise in enacting such provision, but such considerations, in no way, affect the constitutional authority of Congress in the premises."

"INFORMATION ABOUT ST. LOUIS"

Post-Dispatch Issues Fifth Edition of Space-Buyers' Data

"Information about St. Louis" for 1925 appears in the fifth edition this week, over the signature of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. Forty-two pages of data, printed on one side and bound in loose-leaf letter folder size, are made available for advertising space-buyers, and promise is made that the information will be kept up-to-date throughout the year.

Conveniently large finger tabs divide the information under six headings—the St. Louis market; circulations of St. Louis newspapers; market data; the merchandising service of the Post-Dispatch; lineage statistics of the city's newspapers; and analysis of display advertising classifications of these papers.

A two-page map in colors pictures the four general divisions and the sale-route subdivisions of the city for salesmen covering the territory.

All contents are indexed, and all information is set in large clear type, except the tabular statistics.

All-America Cables' Birthday

All-America Cables, Inc., celebrated its 47th birthday May 6. On that day in 1878 the late Capt. James A. Scrymser, founder of the system, took the first step in his plans for establishment of cable communication between the United States, Mexico, Central and South America.

Lynn, Mass., to Advertise

In an effort to boom business and to bring new industries to the city, the Lynn, Mass., Chamber of Commerce has raised the sum of $5,000 among business men of the city, which will be used to advertise for diversified industrial firms to locate there. Newspapers in the largest cities of the country and trade papers willl be used. Charles H. Hastings, publisher of the Lynn (Mass.) Evening Item, is a member of the committee in charge of the advertising.

Hennessy Wins Libel Suit

John A. Hennessy, most recently editor and part owner of the Providence News, but for many years a New York newspaper man, won a verdict of $4,000 recently against the Brooklyn Standard Union in a libel action. The Standard Union had published a story declaring Hennessy to be the defendant in a suit brought by a woman to recover $100,000 for alleged losses in a gambling house said to be owned by Hennessy.

THE new addition to the Buffalo Evening News, a four story reinforced concrete structure faced with brick, located at Seneca and Pearl Streets. Press Department will be on the first floor. The second floor is to be used for expanding the Composing, Stereotyping and Engraving Departments. The third and fourth floors are for storage of paper. Added space on Pearl Street will permit the loading of as many as twenty-seven trucks at one time.

BUFFALO EVENING NEWS

TO CARE for its growing circulation, the Buffalo Evening News will soon occupy the building pictured.

The first floor, which will open into the Press Department, has been planned to accommodate twenty-four Goss High Speed Low Construction Press Units (equivalent to eight unit type sextuple presses) in addition to the two Goss Double Sextuple Presses now in use.

The new Goss Presses, when installed, will run parallel with Seneca Street so that passersby may observe their entire operation from three sides of the building.

With this additional Goss equipment, it will be possible to print 288,000 thirty-two page papers per hour. The present circulation of the News is reported as well in excess of 130,000.

Goss Presses are the choice of successful publishers everywhere. Catalog on request.

PAPER MERGER DENIED

Canadian Mill Amalgamation Will Never Take Place, Official States

Following the annual inspection of the Minnesota and Ontario Paper Company's properties at Kenora, Ont., by a party of bondholders and shareholders, headed by E. W. Backus, president, the statement was made that the visit had absolutely nothing to do with any rumored merger with the Spanish River Pulp and Paper Company and the Abitibi Power and Paper Company.

One member of the party, W. E. Young of the Toronto bond firm of McLeod, Young, Weir & Co., remarked that he wished he could find some one who was prepared to wager on such an amalgamation, as he himself would be quite ready to take up the bet. Mr. Young declared that such an amalgamation could never take place, as Mr. Backus and the directors of the other companies mentioned did not, in any way, see eye to eye.

SCHOOL CONTEST LAUNCHED

8,000 College and High School Publications to Compete

Entry blanks and score cards for the nation-wide contest among high school and college annuals, newspapers, and school magazines were mailed to 8,000 high schools, universities, colleges, and normal schools as the preliminary step in this year's annual contest conducted by the Central Interscholastic Press Association, of which Prof. E. M. Johnson, University of Wisconsin School of Journalism, is director.

Previously held among high schools only, the scope of the contest has been broadened this year to include the higher institutions as well. It is the largest national contest of its kind in the United States and is the only one conducted by a university. Its purpose is to stimulate school editors to improve their publications.

Santa Ana (Cal.) Register Defendant in Libel Action

Two suits for alleged libel, one asking $100,000 damages against the Register Publishing Company of Santa Ana, Cal., and the other seeking $25,000 damages against Fred Marsile, Santa Ana man, were filed in the superior court by Walter Baker, former Santa Ana policeman, now said to be living in Merced.

The actions were based on a newspaper article concerning Baker, founded on an interview published Feb. 24, Marsile being quoted as having seen Baker in San Quentin penitentiary while he was there to deliver a prisoner.

The Register printed a denial of the report March 14.

In the suit Baker alleges that the statements were "false, defamatory and malicious."

FLORIDA AGENCY EXPANDS

C. C. Carr Agency Opens Branch Offices in Tampa and Orlando

The C. C. Carr Advertising Agency of St. Petersburg opened branches recently in Tampa and in Orlando. On June 1, it will open a branch in Jacksonville. At that time the Carr Advertising Agency will have five offices, St. Petersburg, Tampa, Orlando, Jacksonville and New York.

The Tampa office has been opened in a suite of rooms on the seventh floor of the new Tampa Tribune building. The Tampa branch is in charge of C. D. Levin, former owner of an agency in New York City. The Orlando office is in charge of Laurence S. Lynch, formerly of the publicity department of the National Dairy Association and later managing editor of the Winter Park Herald. The Jacksonville office will be in charge of Harry E. Burns, now director of the Jacksonville branch of the Thomas Advertising Service. The New York office, which for the past two years has been located on West Thirty-sixth street, is being moved to Madison avenue. It will be in charge of Miss Etta Klima, secretary of the Carr Agency.

The home office will be located in St. Petersburg, where an agency organization of 15 people is now established.

The agency at the present time is preparing a campaign for the Associated Dailies of Florida, which will be launched in early June.

Business Good in South

Business conditions generally are good and the printing trade and newspapers of the south are showing good records, according to Virgil V. Evans, sales manager of the Ludlow Typograph Company, who recently completed a trip through the south. Mr. Evans spent some time visiting the southern sales office of the Ludlow company at Atlanta.

NEW STUNT IN HOUSTON

Competing Papers Give Press Serial Advance Publicity

Competing papers gave news space to the Houston (Tex.) Press recently when it staged a variety of promotion stunts in advance of the first publication of "Dimples," a serial story of youthful jazz line in Houston.

Billboard posters in colors, bearing only the picture of a girl's face and the name "Dimples," were first flashed on Houston by the Press, followed by small "teaser" advertisements in the Press, Chronicle, and Post-Dispatch.

The latter papers published news stories speculating on the identity of "Dimples" and the solution of the billboard and "teaser" mysteries.

When final advertisements were run by the Press making full announcement of the serial story, the Post-Dispatch generously printed another news item explaining it all.

Movie slides, window cards, circulars, automobile stickers, and various other devices were used by the Press in its exploitation campaign.

Houstonians were recruited to pose for illustrations for the serial's opening chapters.

Managing Editor Walter B. Lister of the Press and his wife, Dorothy Lister, were the authors of "Dimples." It was the first serial story ever printed in Houston that was written exclusively for the paper publishing it by members of its own staff.

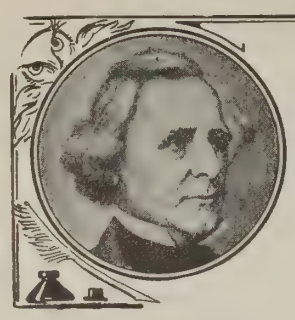
A message to the European and American delegates attending the 21st Convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World held at Houston, Texas, May 9th-14th, 1925

THE TWO SYMBOLS OF SERVICE which have been outstanding during the past decade in the advancement of high ideals in the publishing and advertising world are those of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World and the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

The mottoes of these two associations, indelibly and irrevocably imprinted on their banners are "Truth in Advertising" and "Truth in Circulation," and they have gone hand in hand.



Their combined influence has not only covered the North American Continent but is extending steadily throughout the entire civilized world and is encircling the globe.

Clubs affiliated with the A. A. C. of W. have been established in many lands. A. B. C. associations have been organized or are in the process of formation in several European and other countries. In neither association is there a trace of selfish interest. We are giving to the world the benefit of our experience in the attainment of "Truth in Advertising" and "Truth in Circulation."

All we hope is that eventually there shall be established a world-wide federation of publishing and advertising interests under this banner of "Truth" that will not only be merely of commercial benefit, but will in the final analysis have a beneficial effect upon the welfare of the citizenship of the world at large.

The Houston Convention—made possible by the confidence of those participating in the London Convention—will no doubt send back to our friends across the seas a ringing assurance of co-operation in the attainment of this high ideal. In this the Audit Bureau of Circulations will be in hearty accord.

NEW AND AUTHENTIC HISTORY OF THE HERALD OF THE BENNETTS

CHAPTER FORTY

Ocean Palace for Bennett's Guests—Hearst and the Herald's "Personals"—Mr. Reick Resigns from the Herald

After having cruised tens of thousands of miles in his steam yacht, "Namouna," in comfort and safety, Mr. Bennett, in 1900, had built at Dumbarton, Scotland, a much larger and more magnificent steamship from the plans of the celebrated designer, George L. Watson. She was the largest yacht ever built on the Clyde, 285 feet in length and of over 2,000 tons displacement, and having a speed of 18 knots an hour.

She was a veritable ocean palace, with spacious staterooms, models of modern comfort. The decorations and furnishings of the drawing room and dining hall were the finest that money and skill could produce. In this splendid vessel, named the "Lysistrata," which such guests as Prince Murat, the Duke of Camastra, etc., he cruised from the West Indies on the west to Ceylon and Java on the east. A cow was kept on board to supply fresh milk; there was a room filled with growing plants for table decoration, while from a model bakery hot rolls for breakfast were served, when weather permitted, on deck under a bright red awning.

The "Namouna," he profitably sold to the Republic of Colombia, while the "Lysistrata," he patriotically turned over to the old Russian Government during the Great War for use as a dispatch boat.

Bennett's cruising days had practically ended with his serious illness while on a voyage through the Red Sea, in March, 1914.

Bennett and His "Personals"

In the fall of 1906, in the midst of a heated political campagin, in which Mr. William Randolph Hearst was a candidate for election as Governor of New York, he was actively pushing the prosecution of Mr. Bennett and the Herald for publishing indecent personal advertisements. The personal column was one of the features of the Herald inherited from the senior Bennett's regime, and while a source of revenue, was largely maintained by Mr. Bennett for sentimental reasons. These advertisements were all censored by one of the Herald's advertising staff, and the appending of the words—"object matrimony" was always insisted on in doubtful cases. While the management did its best, there is no doubt that the censorship was at times inadequate, and Mr. Hearst produced enough evidence to cause the indictment of the New York Herald Company, Mr. Bennett, and his advertising counsel, Mr. Manley M. Gillam, on Oct. 22, 1906. Four other prominent members of the staff had been served with warrants, but were not further prosecuted. The defendants pleaded "Not guilty."

The American boasted that:

"The indictment and arraignment of the defendants is a direct result of the crusade which William Randolph Hearst and the New York American and the Evening Journal carried on for months against the 'pernicious' personal column."

Mr. Hearst at this time was making "a whirlwind tour" of the city and state, and the Herald printed long articles attacking him, headed: "Hearst's Defence Is a Yell of 'Lies;'" "Hearst a Foe to his Men's Union;" How Hearst Betrayed Henry George," etc., etc.

The case dragged along until April, 1907, when Mr. Bennett returned specially from Europe to courageously meet the charges and refute the American's hint that he was remaining in Europe out of reach of the prosecution. Acting on the advice of his lawyers, Joal M. Marx and William Rand, Jr., he pleaded guilty, and appeared with his Advertising Counsel in the criminal branch of the U. S. Circuit Court on April 10, for sentence. Judge Hough then imposed total fines of $31,000, based on the indictment of having used the U. S. mails for improper purposes. The money was paid in cash to the clerk of the court—$25,000 from Mr. Bennett; $5,000 from the Herald Co., and $1,000 from Mr. Manley M. Gillam, the Herald's Advertising Counsel. The entire proceedings only lasted ten minutes.

Mr. Reick Suddenly Leaves the Herald

Without previous warning Mr. William C. Reick cabled his resignation as president of the Herald Company to Mr. Bennett early in January, 1907. It must undoubtedly have been a great shock to Mr. Bennett to thus suddenly lose the man upon whom he depended to run the Herald, but there was no hesitation—the resignation was promptly accepted.

Mr. Reick with his large cash resources had acquired "a substantial interest in the New York Times Company and will hereafter be associated with Adolph S. Ochs, the publisher and controlling owner in the management of the Times," said that paper.

However, from an announcement in the Philadelphia Public Ledger of the same date, it appears that Mr. Reick had also acquired a part ownership of that paper and succeeded Mr. Adolph S. Ochs as president of the Philadelphia Ledger Company, with Mr. George W. Ochs as the publisher.

Mr. Reick finally disposed of his holdings in the Ochs papers to acquire control of the New York Sun in 1911, at that time the paper being largely owned by Wall Street interests. In June, 1916, Mr. Munsey bought the Sun, retaining Mr. Reick to manage the evening edition, which he did with such success as to elicit warm commendation from Mr. Munsey.

"NICE BUNCH OF FELLOWS"

Says Arch Selwyn of Dramatic Critics, Repudiating Brother Edgar

Arch Selwyn, theatrical producer, returning from abroad to New York recently, aired a spat over dramatic critics with his brother Edgar.

Edgar had said in effect dramatic critics were worse than useless.

"I don't agree with Edgar," said Arch Selwyn. "I seldom do. The critics are absolutely all right. They work from their point of view, and it does not make any difference what they say or do not say, for if a play is all right the public will go to it.

"I was in Southern France when my brother spoke out of his turn in London," said Mr. Selwyn. "When I got to London I found the critics up in the air. I'm back in New York, and I find my brother has stirred up trouble here, too."

"Do you regard the critic as essential to the drama?"

"Yes," said Mr. Selwyn. "They are essential. I am anxious to get their opinion. My brother, who also is an author, is more sensitive. He does not care for it in the same way. If the critics do not like a show, it is no sign that it is a failure. What they say adversely may hurt a little while, but eventually the public makes the decision.

"Personally, I find the critics a nice bunch of fellows. They are as necessary to their papers as the sports writers are for the sports page—a necessary evil. Most of them are too capable to be wasting their time writing criticism. They could make a great deal more at writing or producing plays."

JEWELERS URGED TO ADVERTISE

Vice-President of Midwest Group Says It Builds Business

E. O. Little, vice-president of Zone 3 of the National Retail Jewelers, urged jewelers to advertise more extensively when he addressed the state convention in Des Moines, Ia., recently.

"Competition is not between jewelers, but between industries," Mr. Little said. "I believe you will agree with me that the store, the individual, the company or the industry that consistently advertises its wares stands the greater chance of selling those wares in competition."

THE GREATEST POWER IN MODERN ADVERTISING

FOR nearly a century and a half The Times has been the outstanding national newspaper of Great Britain. Its great history, combined with an enterprising modern outlook; the authority with which it speaks, and the superb quality of its printing and production, maintain it in an unassailable position as the leader of the British Press.

And as it is the greatest force in journalism, so it is the greatest power in advertising. It is the one indispensable medium for all announcements intended for the wealthy official, professional and business classes.

Each day's issue speaks for itself. Both the volume and the character of the advertising carried by The Times prove how indispensable it is to the advertiser seeking an entrance to the British market.

Advertising men who visited England last year were able to test these facts on the spot. But The Times is at any time happy to supply further information. If you desire to know more of Britain's greatest advertising medium, get in touch with

WINS LOVING CUP FOR ESSAY ON VALUE OF ADVERTISING CLUBS

W. O. Riddle First in Des Moines Contest—Says He Learned Economic Significance of Advertising at Club Meetings

W. O. RIDDLE of the Meredith Publications, Des Moines, has been declared the winner in the Des Moines advertising Club contest on "What I Have Learned at the Advertising Club."

Mr. Riddle's article which won for him a loving cup, follows:

My outline on, "What I Have Learned at The Advertising Club," is an attempt to show: first, wherein the club has helped me to gain, and retain, a knowledge of the principles of effective advertising; and second, wherein it has caused me to realize the economic significance of advertising.

By the economic significance of advertising I mean the part which it plays in marketing efficiency and its value to the consuming public.

Practically everything which I have learned can be placed under the following three divisions:

1. It pays to advertise.
2. How to make advertising pay.
3. The economic value of advertising.

A striking illustration that farm paper advertising pays, is, a comparison of the sales made by the two leading mail order houses with their advertising in farm papers.

In 1923 the total volume of sales made by Montgomery Ward & Co., was 239 per cent greater than in 1913. Sears Roebuck & Co., show an increase of 126 per cent.

Montgomery Ward & Co., from 1914 to 1923 have placed an average of 118,468 lines of advertising in state and national farm papers each year. Sears & Roebuck have used a yearly average space of 33,445 lines.

In 1922 the sales made by Montgomery Ward & Co., were 22 per cent greater than in 1921. The gain made by Sears Roebuck & Co. was only 2.3 per cent. The former used 349,216 lines of space in farm papers; the latter used only 1,350.

In 1923 Sears Roebuck & Co. adopted the good strategy of advertising. They placed 47,570 lines in farm papers and made an increase in sales of 18 per cent. Montgomery Ward & Co. secured an increase of 46 per cent over 1922, from 385,923 lines of advertising.

The idea for making a series of studies such as this was suggested to me in a speech made before the Advertising Club by Mr. H. E. Kiester who told of the splendid results obtained from farm paper advertising by the Portland Cement Association.

Mr. Austin, advertising manager of the Omaha Bee, formerly a Des Moines man, made what I consider one of the most practical speeches on advertising that I have ever heard.

In the course of his talk he laid down three fundamental principles for effective advertising. I shall discuss but one. To advertise most successfully, Mr. Austin said, one must advertise from a certain angle. Or, to state the principle differently one must select a distinctive characteristic of his product and feature that in his copy.

I remember this most distinctly because I took pains to analyze the copy of some of the most successful advertisers to determine whether this was true.

It is interesting to note that the Victor Talking Machine has been telling "the world" for years that certain great artists sing for Victor records only.

Here are a few of the others. Pepsodent—Combat that film! Vacuum Oil Company—We supply the one correct grade of oil for your car, whatever the make. Paris Garter Company—No metal can touch you. One could multiply the examples almost without end.

As an advertising man, I am interested not merely in knowing how to advertise effectively, but also in knowing what value it is to the public.

As between producers as a whole, and consumers as a whole, I should say that the consumers are benefited more. Advertising gives to consumers in the quickest possible way an adequate knowledge of new goods on the market. Furthermore advertising does tend to raise the quality of goods on the market, or at least gives to buyers the opportunity to buy the quality most suited to their needs.

In contrast, producers of basic commodities cannot increase the market for their product to a very large degree by advertising. To a certain extent they can, but the chief result of their advertising is the more speedy elimination of the unfit.

Do not understand from this that I think it doesn't pay the producer to advertise. If he is particularly aggressive, original or has something new, or something unique to offer the public he can profit tremendously from advertising and he, perhaps, profits most of all.

A. P. ADVISORY BOARDS REORGANIZED

State Organizations to Elect Representatives Under New Resolution Adopted at New York Convention

Prior to November of this year the state organizations of the Associated Press will meet to elect their representatives on the association's divisional advisory boards.

This is in line with the resolution adopted by A. P. members at the annual meeting in New York this year, April 21. The complete text of the resolution, published for the first time, follows:

"Recognizing the excellent results that the Association has obtained through the informal creation of state associations of members of The Associated Press, and desiring further to stimulate the creation and maintenance of such organizations, it is hereby

"RESOLVED, That such state organizations, the formation of which and membership in which shall be voluntary, are recognized as advisories of the administration of the work of the Association; that in order that such state associations may uniformly work to the greatest advantage, their annual meetings shall be held prior to November of each year and that at such annual meetings each state association shall elect, from among its membership, a member of The Associated Press to represent it upon the advisory board for the division in which the state is located and in this way all the members of each divisional advisory board shall be elected, their terms of service being one year; that the secretary of each state association shall certify to the secretary of The Associated Press the election of the representative of the State Association on the advisory board;

"Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the members of each divisional advisory board thus constituted to meet once a year during the month of November, at the divisional headquarters, and at such meeting a divisional advisory board chairman shall be elected who shall serve for one year or until his successor is elected; that if the meeting so held thus resolves, it shall be the duty of such divisional chairman to attend a subsequent meeting of the Board of Directors to present to the Board of Directors a report of the activities and recommendations of the various state associations and of the divisional advisory board itself;

"Resolved, That where the membership in any state does not avail itself of the opportunity afforded to gain representation upon the divisional advisory board, it shall be the objective of the divisional advisory board to stimulate interest in the formation of a state association in any such state, but if found impractical to create an association in any such state the divisional advisory board shall designate to the members of The Associated Press in any such state the association in another state with which such members may associate themselves;

"Resolved, That the necessary expenses of the divisional advisory boards, the traveling expenses incurred by their members in attending the yearly divisional advisory board meetings and the traveling expenses of the chairmen who may attend a subsequent meeting of the Directors shall be paid by The Associated Press; that the resolution adopted April 20, 1909, amended April 22, 1919, designating the manner in which advisory boards shall be constituted is hereby repealed."

TO SAVE NEWSPAPER SPACE

Cooper Orders Wider Use of A. P. Logotype Credit

Kent Cooper, general manager of the Associated Press, this week in his first special order to news and traffic departments of the association, directed that hereafter, when credit is inserted immediately following the dateline in a dispatch it should read AP and not By the Associated Press.

The order, it was explained, was planned to aid member publishers conserve newspaper space.

It reads as follows:

"Hereafter, when credit is inserted immediately following the dateline in a dispatch, it should read AP and not By the Associated Press. Publication of credit by members of the two capital letters AP or an AP logotype will fully comply with the order of the board of directors respecting credits. This order does not affect a reference to the Associated Press in the body of a dispatch."

The AP logotype was designed by Melville Stone, A. P., counsellor, in 1919, just after the Supreme Court decision establishing the property right to news. The idea then was to save space in crediting A. P. matter. When a recent check-up showed the practice was not generally followed, it was decided to make it a rule in the press association's news department. Plans are being made to have typewriters equipped with the logotype, and linotype companies are being urged to include it in their new fonts.

For those who accept the principle that want-ads furnish the surest test of reader confidence—and who will doubt it?—the want-ad pages of The Dallas News tell a convincing story.

Still, the fact that The News leads all Texas papers in number of want-ads will occasion no surprise among those who know their Texas.

One of the striking characteristics of West Virginian cities is the newness of everything. They are not made over cities. They are new. No reconstruction—rather construction. New buildings—new stores—new hotels—new pavements—new homes—and everything up to the very last minute in up-to-dateness.

It is typical of West Virginia. Everything must be modern.

Such a territory is a good territory in which to sell modern merchandise.

An aggressive advertising campaign can be operated in West Virginia at a comparatively small cost by using space in these leading dailies in these leading cities.

Our Own World of Letters

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

IN an "Outline of the Law of Libel," by W. Blake Odgers (Macmillan & Co., Ltd., London) will be found an excellent presentation of the subject from the British point of view. Chapters deserving special mention are "Construction and Truth," "Privilege" and "Criminal Law."

The last chapter is possibly the most important of all because it points out the distinction between a crime and a tort, discusses libel on a dead man, gives the statutory protection to newspapers, and discusses blasphemous words, obscene words, and seditious words—to say nothing of comments about the censorship of the press.

ARTICLES in the Washington Newspaper, the official organ of the Washington Press Association, for April include "Democracy and the Press," by Augustus P. Reccord, Pastor, First Unitarian Church, Detroit; "Personal Touch Advertising," by Ralph E. Shannon, business manager, the Washington (Ia.) Evening Journal; "Holiday Advertising," by O. H. Woody, editor, Okanogan Independent; "A Good News Editor," by Frederick J. Lazell, School of Journalism, University of Iowa; and "Newspapers and the Truth," by E. S. Danforth, editor, Vermillion (S. D.) Dakota Republican. The Washington Newspaper is published by the School of Journalism, University of Washington, Seattle.

A FEW weeks ago I made a threat to publish something on the treatment of crime in the newspapers. Those who are interested will find my article in The Independent, for April 25. Frankly, the quoted matter is possibly the most valuable.

For example, Gene Fowler, managing editor, the New York American, presented the following point of view:

> There is only one rule for any initiative, and that is common sense. If you left crime stories out of the newspapers entirely, I do not believe that we would be moving toward elimination of crime in its commission. Indeed, publication of crime, I think, isn't the bugaboo that a holier-than-thou minority would make it. I claim that the newspaper in presenting crime, not as a daily dozen exercise, but as a blunt, cruel, unwholesome fact, infers its preachment of the "wages of sin" on the head of the doer.
> Common sense is the sole guide in presentation of news of any sort, and crime is news.

Ralph Pulitzer of the New York World, expressed his opinion as follows:

> It seems enough to me that the function of a newspaper is to give its readers an intellectual and emotional background of life as it is being lived around them.
> To ignore the release of all the passions, from the most primitive to the most complex, which takes place in the commission of crimes, would be to give the reader a two-dimensional view of life.
> It is therefore the function of the editor not to suppress crime news, but to try to relate it to the other happenings of the day in a manner that will as nearly as possible give an undistorted picture of the lights and shadows of that day.

The article is not a reply to "Headlining Happiness," by Willis J. Abbot in the preceding issue of The Independent, though it does discuss the problem of printing crime news from a different angle.

IN "Vocational Self-Guidance," by Douglas Fryer (J. B. Lippincott Co.) there are three chapters that are of some interest to the readers of EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

The chapter on "Advertising," by Frank Presbrey, for example, contains much that can be read to advantage by all who solicit copy for newspapers. His definition of real advertising is one of the best that I have seen:

> I should say that real advertising is a common sense combination of the skill of the artist, the writer, and the salesman, directed by the man who knows why people buy and through what channels the greatest number of possible consumers or purchasers can be most effectively reached.

Ivy L. Lee, in his chapter on "Publicity," quotes this difference between American and English newspapers:

> The English newspaper prints what is important; the American newspaper prints what is interesting. Our people pick up a newspaper in the morning and read the interesting stories, but to the important discussions of tariff, railroad and other serious economic questions they give little attention.

The chapter on "Journalism," comes from the pen of Edward V. Riis of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle. He devotes considerable space to the rewards of journalism and includes many worthwhile anecdotes to illustrate his points. Typical is the story which he tells about his father, Jacob Riis, who was for many years police court reporter for the New York Tribune:

> My father, browsing about in the office of the Board of Health in New York many years ago, came across a report indicating that the germs of typhoid were in the city's drinking water. He investigated, taking his camera with him along the Croton watershed. He found where the pollution was, took pictures of the pest-holes which were discharging deadly poisons into the watershed to be mixed with the water drawn from the tap of the householder, and laid the facts and the photographs before the public. The publication of this series of articles led to the condemnation of a strip of land along the water, the elimination of the sources of pollution and the purification of the water supply. It cost $5,000,000 to give New York pure drinking water, but it saved many lives.

Other chapters present the opportunities found in the various vocations. L. F. Boffey, editor, The Purchasing Agent, contributes the chapter on "Industrial Purchasing."

The chapters which I have mentioned specifically would have been more complete had the "Suggested Readings" at the close of each chapter included more representative volumes.

"STAR Stories by Tribune Tellers," is not the title, but does describe a collection of some of the best news stories that appeared last year in the columns of the Chicago Tribune. Fourteen men and women of the regular staff are represented in the booklet, which bears the official title "Bellringers for 1924."

These stories deal with the funeral of a great American, Woodrow Wilson, a journalistic investigation of prohibition under the Eighteenth Amendment, the last game of the World's Series, an analysis of Chicago's sanitary district, a president returning to his people in the backwoods, a night spent with Chicago bums and panhandlers, etc.

In view of the attention which the Chicago press has attracted in the matter of treatment of crime, the story of the first day of the trial of Leopold and Loeb—written by Robert Lee—affords an opportunity to decide for one's self whether the Chicago Tribune put the emphasis in the wrong place.

The booklet concludes with some "Prize Heads of 1924." Every week the Chicago Tribune awards three prizes for the best heads. Possible winners are selected every morning and placed on a board in the editorial room. At the end of the week the managing editor selects the three combining the most originality with the function of the head which is to tell what the story is about.

A foreword tells how much harder it is to write good heads than poetry. In view of this fact it seems only just that the booklet should give the names of those who wrote the prize heads. For those who wrote the stories in the booklet the Tribune prints, not only names, but photographs of the authors. It would also be interesting to know whether the copydesk may not have had a part in giving the stories some of their literary charm.

The old New York Globe used to award prizes for the best news stories. Later it had to divide each prize between the man who wrote the story and the man who edited the copy—in justice to all concerned.

D. APPLETON & CO., announce for immediate publication "The Conscience of the Newspaper," by L. N. Flint, Director of the School of Journalism of the University of Kansas. This book will be reviewed in a later issue along with "The Best News Stories of 1924," selected by Joseph Anthony and Woodman Morrison—a book published by Small, Maynard & Co.

Turnbull and published by the School of Journalism, University of Oregon, Eugene, Ore.

WRITES HOOSIER BOOK

Louis Ludlow of Washington Corps Publishes Reminiscences

Louis Ludlow, tall, gaunt, good-natured Hoosier, and one of the best known and best liked of Washington correspondents, has just published another volume of reminiscences filled with native humor and shrewd characterization.

The title is, "In the Heart of Hoosierland," the illustrations by Clifford K. Berryman, cartoonist of the Washington Star.

Ludlow's previous volume, "From Cornfield to Press Gallery," possessed the same human touch and charitable trait which have endeared him to the Washington corps.

President Coolidge sent an autograph letter to Ludlow by White House messenger, commending the book.

New A. P. News Rule Adopted

Further regulation of the use of Associated Press news is provided for in an amendment to the by-laws passed at the April 17 meeting of the Board of Directors, it was announced this week. The amendment, which is to Section 5, Article 7 of the by-laws, reads: "Only the place specified in the certificate of membership shall appear in the title name or heading of the newspaper, wherein the news of the Associated Press appears."

Help Churches With Advertising

When a church contemplates a new building it consults an architect. In the same manner it ought to consult advertising men when it plans its advertising, but too often the pastor believes he can write advertisements as well as sermons.

Sometimes pastors do not care for suggestions to improve their messages to the public—other times they do. If the pastors in your town can be trained to use better copy, their advertising in your paper will be more resultful. You will be doing them and the church at large a service to offer them suggestions.

Study your church advertising columns. Compare them not with other church advertising columns, but with what the churches of your community might do through your paper if they really get down to business.

Perhaps the advertising club in your city can help stimulate interest among the churches.

Julius Liebman Finds Room for "Freak" Stories

ACCURACY is what Julius Liebman fights hardest for in directing the staff of the Milwaukee Sentinel, of which he is managing editor.

"Accuracy," he said this week, "is probably the one quality needed more than any other in getting out the right kind of newspaper.

"Staff reporters, no matter how long they have been connected with a newspaper, should be constantly checked for correctness in their stories. But reporters shouldn't, on the other hand, be continually the butt of fault finding. On the Sentinel we have found it helpful to give prizes to reporters doing work showing special merit.

"All this is old stuff, but it must be hammered at continually to bring results."

Amusement as well as information, Mr. Liebman believes is needed to round out a successful newspaper. He would have the news stories entertainingly written, but not at the expense of accuracy.

Mr. Liebman recently put into service in his newspaper a novel stunt for attracting the attention of readers. He described it briefly in a recent interview published in EDITOR & PUBLISHER, and enlarged upon it this week.

On his front page every day, he carries a feature story under a special head, which is a condensed summary of all the spot news features contained in the newspaper. It is written in a humorous vein, and at the end bears the notice that complete accounts of the various amusing incidents summarized may be found elsewhere in the paper.

"There are all sorts of strange incidents daily, which carried in detail in the body of the newspaper, make a complete story in itself when summarized," he explained. "Thus the other day, when an automobile swerved from the street and crashed through a plate glass window, wrecking a brand new car, which had never been run a mile. This was worth a story in itself. Attention to it was called when it was included in the condensed summary of other news oddities of the day.

"This feature, I believe, has a marked tendency to make readers go into the inside of a newspaper and look for human interest stuff. There are a great many newspaper readers, who are content with headlines as far as serious information is concerned, and who gain their greatest satisfaction in newspapers through the freak happenings in human lives."

Mr. Liebman is of the opinion that the reporters of most value to their newspapers are those who have spent most of their lives in the cities where the paper is published. He himself grew up on the Milwaukee Sentinel. He started on the Sentinel in 1908, holding respectively positions of copy reader, head of the copy desk, assistant city editor, assistant managing editor and managing editor.

Honesty in Advertising

These Qualities Have Made

The Jiji Shimpo

Japan's Greatest Newspaper

By standing firm against every influence that would color our news or editorials and against every unscrupulous person who would employ our advertising columns for unworthy purposes, we have won the esteem and respect of readers and advertisers alike.

Our policy of protecting them, and facing squarely our solemn responsibility as a newspaper, is not only a source of satisfaction to them but also to us. The policy has paid handsomely, as fairness and honesty may be expected always to pay. And today The Jiji Shimpo carries

More High Class Advertising Than Any Other Newspaper in Its Territory

That the Jiji's rates should be somewhat higher than those of other newspapers is natural in view of its superior value as an advertising medium. Advertisers who investigate the comparative merits of newspapers in Japan are glad to pay the small additional cost of Jiji advertising. Measured by results, it is the most economical medium in the Japanese Empire.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

The Committee's Act

To Editor & Publisher: I do not know whether it is worth while to endeavor to have you correct a statement which has just been drawn to my attention, appearing in your April 4, 1925, issue entitled, "Senator Couzens Adamant—Still Refuses to Allow Tax Hearings to be Reported."

In the first place, let me point out to you that it is absolutely against the law to permit tax hearings to be made public prior to their presentation to Congress. Secondly, in the matter of prohibition hearings, only one incidence occurred where any reporters were required to pay for any transcript, and that was at their own election because they thought there was going to be something sensational in it.

I am enclosing you a copy of a letter written to the Associated Press here, dated April third, which made a complaint because they had to pay a stenographer to stay up late in the night to make a transcript of the testimony for them.

The action of keeping the prohibition hearings behind closed doors is the action of the Committee and it would be more proper to say that it was the Committee's secrecy rather than Senator Couzen's secrecy. The Committee is adamant and not Senator Couzens and the heading of your article, therefore, is entirely improper, because tax hearings may not be reported and it is the Committee that is adamant against open hearings on prohibition rather than the Chairman.

James Couzens,
U. S. Senate.

Our Convention Service

To Editor & Publisher: I think that you have done a better job than ever in connection with the annual specials concerning the Associated Press and the A. N. P. A. Your issue for April 15 appeals to me more strongly than any of its pre-Convention predecessors, excellent though these were. I particularly like the special photographs, many of which have for me particular values because they are of persons with whom I have been associated in years past.

The Editor and Publisher has assuredly become a periodical of which our craft may be proud. It is an essential for all who are active in newspaper work or any newspaper affiliations. To be an informed editor and publisher one must regularly read your Editor & Publisher.

Walter Irving Clarke.
Philadelphia, Pa.

"Save the Tree"

Editor and Publisher:

Just a line to compliment you upon the entirely right and appropriate editorial of April 18 entitled "Save the Tree."

It is exceedingly helpful for you to run such an editorial, and I know that you have done it because the forestry movement is one which you understand the full significance of.

I have clipped the editorial and am passing it along to Managing Director E. P. Allen of the American Forest Week Commiteee in Washington.

Printing Crime News Healthful

Memphis, Tenn., April 24.

To Editor & Publisher:—"Don't print crime news. We don't think it is nice."

That's what a lot of churches are saying to a lot of newspapers in a lot of cities right now. And some of the newspapers, in a supine and feeble desire to please everybody, especially the church people who happen to be organized better than the non-church people, are yielding to this silly request.

They tried it in Chicago. Thank Heavens—and thank the good sense, courage and brains of Chicago editors—they were ignored. There they went so far as to threaten to influence advertisers, did these church people in their silly desire to reform the world by repression, by taking away liberties, and restraining American rights.

They are meeting more success in some other towns. But the towns are small towns—towns where editors have the small town idea of trying to please everybody by printing nothing really hurtful about anybody. And don't tell us we are prejudice against small towns. We worked in small towns for years and know the virtues and weaknesses of small town papers. Big town papers, much as they are maligned, have a thousand times more courage and do a thousand times more good than small town papers which overlook wrongs and dishonesty to print stories about the painting of John Brown's barn, because John happens to be active in the First Methodist church, an officer in the First National Bank and one of the town's so-called leading citizens.

The action of some papers in segregating crime news, or in leaving it out of the paper entirely is asinine, silly, and detrimental to the real interests of the newspapers.

The majority of readers, the great majority, want crime news. In leaving out crime news editors are yielding to a noisy minority of the kind leading most of the foolish reforms now on. These editors, in not playing crime news as it should be played, are losing friends among the great and silent ranks of everyday readers who want the news of the world, whether it be crime or church, truthfully and accurately and fearlessly told.

I don't say crime news should be exploited in the way some metropolitan papers do. The smearing of pages and pages of news with sordid and revolting crime details does not please me. But the real facts in such crimes should not be withheld to please anyone.

The psychology in leaving out crime news is wrong. It would be better to print too much than too little.

When we leave out crime news we become namby-pamby recorders of the nice pink tea events of the day. We become cowards, shrinking before the uplifted hands and smug faces of reform fanatics. If the press, as a whole, were to go this way the press would have little excuse for existence. But there is little danger. Most newspaper editors have too much sense.

They say the young should not read crime news. Piffle. In this day and age, little can be kept from the young. Educate the young. Don't try to withhold things from them.

They say printing crime news prompts and suggests other crimes. More piffle. If this is true suppress the histories. Let's don't suggest any more wars.

And how are we to classify crime news? Shall news of political crookedness be suppressed or shoved down into an obscure corner of a page because it is crime news? Shall crimes, crying to high heaven for exposure and for public action, be buried on an inside page to please some smug pew holders?

Shall newspaper editors bow down in the dust before ignorant, narrow minded and prejudiced people who are trying to lead the American people by the nose?

God forbid! If such come to pass we shall quit journalism and hunt a job selling ribbons or cleaning streets.

Let editors say how their news shall be printed. Let them think of the great and silent masses of readers, not the vociferous one who send delegations to the editor's office to ask that he give half his front page to a Billy Sunday revival. If editors quit thinking for themselves, if they jump to try out every silly suggestion of half baked reformers, they had best give up their editorial chairs and hunt other jobs.

Crime news is news. It is news broad in scope. Its scope is the broadest of any class of news.

There are political crimes. There are crimes of violence. There are financial crimes. There are industrial crimes, national crimes, state crimes, a thousand kinds of crimes. They need to be spread before the world and the criminals exposed. God grant that some day we come to recognize war as a crime unless it be war of independence, of liberty.

And some people would suppress, would hide these crimes. The strange part of it is that these people have obtained the notice they have.

Here in Tennessee we have had some fine examples of what rabid reformers will do if teaching of evolution in the schools. They have closed Sunday theatres. They have put burdensome taxes on tobacco and gasoline. They have done a hundred other things, suggested by the churches and the Ku Klux Klan. They are of the type that would smother crime news. They must be checked.

Don't be fooled, don't be lulled to sleep. There are insidious influences at work these days, that would stifle the freedom of the press.

Stay awake or the press will not long be free.

Bennett in London

To Editor & Publisher:—In Mr. Coleman's interesting history of the "Herald of the Bennetts" I notice an error (perhaps typographical) starting of the London Herald—European Edition. Instead of 1889 that paper was started a number of years previously. I do not remember the year but think it was published for more than 10 years when Mr. Bennett cabled me to go over in 1890 to take charge and reorganize it, as it was losing 5 or 6 hundred pounds a week. This I corrected and returned to New York in a few months in business charge of the N. Y. Herald & Telegram. But before sailing, suggested to Mr. Bennett that he put in charge an American Editor with a business instinct on the London edition. This he agreed to and asked me to send him someone. On returning to New York I wrote him suggesting either Mr. Reick of the Herald, Mr. Flynn, editor of the Telegram, Mr. Blumenfeld, city editor of the Telegram, or Stephen O'Meara, Boston Journal.

Mr. Bennett sent for Mr. Reick but considered he would do better for the Herald in New York. Then he sent for Mr. Flynn, who also returned to New York. Then Mr. Bennett sent for Blumenfeld and he took editorial charge in London until the paper was discontinued some years later. Mr. Blumenfeld, after being connected with the Herald a few years in New York, returned to London and for a number of years has been in editorial control of the Daily Express there, and quite prominent in the London newspaper world.

Very truly yours,

PAINT CAMPAIGN URGED

Department of Commerce Says Advertising Will Boost West Indies Sales

Proper advertising is recommended as a means of developing the American paint and varnish trade in the West Indies, according to J. W. Wizeman, Chemical Division, Department of Commerce, in a pamphlet just issued, entitled, "Paints, Pigments, and Varnishes in the West Indies." The importance of this market for these materials is evidenced by the fact that American shipments during 1923 (the latest statistics available), amounted to over $2,500,000, or one-eighth of the total amount shipped from the United States to all countries.

The almost total absence of paint-manufacturing establishments in the West Indies makes the territory an excellent market for imported materials, the pamphlet shows. Mr. Wizeman points out that the need for protection against natural deterioration is great, because of climatic conditions, such as heat, copious rains, salt air, etc. In addition, there are the ravages of insects and fungus growths to contend with.

New Trade Paper Announced

Merchandising Magazines, Inc., is going to publish a new magazine, Good Looks Merchandising, for the toilet goods trade. Its staff will be Frank C. Thomas, president and advertising manager; Harold C. Bodman, vice-president and editorial director; David Magowan; secretary-treasurer; Gaybert B. Little, managing editor and W. M. Philpott, assistant advertising manager.

Ground Broken for Cleveland Plant

Ground has been broken for the new $2,000,000 home of the Cleveland News and Sunday News-Leader, at Superior avenue and E. 18th street, Cleveland. The permit for the building was taken out late last week, and as soon as the excavating is finished, work on the structure itself will start.

$12 DUTY CHARGED ON BRITISH GIFT FLAG

MAJOR WYNNE WILLIAMS, advertisement manager of the London Times, walked down the gangplank of the Cunarder Samaria May 4, bearing under his arm a furled Union Jack, covered by a rubber casing.

Maj. Wynne Williams

Came the regular business of customs inspection. Major Williams had written he had nothing to declare except a silk flag of Great Britain.

"How much is it worth," demanded the inspector.

"I'm sure I don't know," rejoined the Major, a trifle hotly. "It's a relative value, possibly."

"Come with me," ordered the official in the blue cap and gold braid of U. S. custom.

The Major obeyed, but protested.

"It is to be a gift, you know, to the advertising men of Houston, the city which is to be host to the British delegation to the 21st annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, next week."

Protest or not, he paid $12 duty.

A short few minutes before, Major Williams, conversing with an Editor & Publisher representative, who went down the Bay to greet the English visitors, had warmly praised what he called "American hospitality, the most cordial in the world, you know."

GASOLINE PRICES

Are they fixed by the Standard Oil Company?

Or are they fixed by competition and supply and demand?

Welcome To Texas

Publishers, advertising agents and executives in all branches of the great fields of journalism and advertising are cordially invited to make the EDITOR & PUBLISHER offices their business headquarters while visiting New York City.

We will consider it a pleasure to serve you.

We have arranged conference rooms where publishers may discuss business with their clients. The ideal location of our new offices (close to the Grand Central Terminal and Pennsylvania Railroad Station) affords great time saving as well as helpful conveniences for visiting publishers who are pressed for time. We sincerely hope that you will take advantage of this opportunity to meet your clients in the heart of the great city.

Elaborate facilities for service, including telephone, telegraph, clerical and secretarial service, have been arranged and will be extended without obligations. For eleven years EDITOR & PUBLISHER has maintained its enviable position as leading trade publication of the publishing and advertising business. With this supremacy there has developed something more than a weekly trade publication—the office of EDITOR & PUBLISHER has become the Service Center of these two great fields of endeavor.

To the unrivalled spot news features that characterize the editorial policy of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, there has been added a constantly increasing service combining market research work with widely expanding statistical features dealing with circulations and advertising rates of the recognized leading force in national advertising—the newspapers.

Such a highly developed and constantly expanding Service Center necessitated the removal of our headquarters to the recognized center of national and international advertising and publishing affairs. The new offices, to which you are cordially invited, afford increased space for the further development of our several departments, and we do not hesitate to promise increased Service in every detail.

We shall look forward to welcoming our readers and clients from all corners of the publishing and advertising fields, whenever they are visiting New York City. From our new headquarters we shall continue to extend every service within our power to all such friends no matter where they may be located.

Newspaper advertising is always and anywhere the cheapest, surest and most effective of all advertising mediums.

In the South, however, conditions make it possible for newspaper advertising to reach its highest grade of efficiency. The rates are particularly attractive, and the circulations of this list of papers are such that almost the entire buying public can be reached or influenced.

Moreover, the territory itself offers unexcelled opportunities to the National Advertiser, in that it is always and continuously making strides forward, thereby creating new demands and needs. A progressive territory is always progressive in everything. New merchandise appeals to it in the same proportion as the opening of a new highway.

The South Is Progressive

The South is agricultural territory which means a large revenue and equally large needs in the way of machinery and devices.

However, the great purchasing power of the South is not limited to its agricultural resources. The enormous production of its mines, forests, manufacturing enterprises, live stock industry, fishing and oystering, swell this power to a staggering total.

The possibilities and opportunities are increasing every day.

The South bids a cordial welcome to advertisers who believe in the stability of a market which, once secured, sticks to advertisers who seek opportunity and to advertisers who believe in cultivating good will and sales in the home.

The South Is Prosperous

RADIO SECTIONS HAVE PROVED THEIR VALUE

Editor of Washington Herald's Radio Tabloid Disagrees with Mr. Felix's Criticism of Their Worth to Advertisers

By Robert L. Bellem

(Editor, Washington Herald Broadcast)

It is my experience, borne out by my Washington Herald radio work, that any that any argument against the merits of the newspaper tabloid section as a media for radio advertising is pure assumption, predicated on misinformation.

The avidity with which radio fans from the start fell upon these newspaper tabloid sections as fast as they appeared on the streets,—the eagerness with which they still look forward to those radio publication days, utterly refutes such a premise in Washington.

As well discountenance the placing of exclusive women's apparel copy in Harper's Bazaar; as well decry inserting "Rooms for Rent" ads in the classified columns on the argument that a more wide appeal can be made R. O. P! Along the same lines, why sell footwear in a shoe store? Why not rent a table in the middle of Main Street—because more people pass that way? The very argument used by Mr. Felix in a recent issue of Editor & Publisher against the radio tabloids—that car-cleaners had picked up 61 of them from the floor of a commuter's train on one Saturday afternoon—reverts to the tabloid's favor. Were those sections unread, they would have remained in the newspaper untouched, taken home and there consigned to the trash barrel after the remainder of the newspaper had been perused. That they had been carefully separated from the other sections of the newspapers proves that they had been read first of all—then discarded. I wonder whether Mr. Felix, in compiling his data, ascertained how many of the sections retrieved by the car cleaners had been clipped or torn—that is, how many articles and advertisements had been taken from them, to be saved for future reference and Monday marketing?

The newspaper radio tabloid of today is no longer entirely technical—at least, The Herald Broadcast (a part of every Saturday's Washington Herald) is not. Technical articles of general interest are interspersed with the very human-interest program stories that Mr. Felix so admires. In other words, the trend is toward giving the reader a little of everything—just as the main news sections of the newspapers pander to every conceivable taste.

Automobile sections, real estate sections, poultry - farm - garden supplements — all these have proven by the test of years the logical places for their respective class of advertisement. Why discriminate against the radio section just because it happens to be the present style to print it in tabloid (and hence more readable and accessible) form?

U. S. ISSUES REPORT ON PAPER MILL WAGES

Department of Labor Compiles Statistics on Industry Gathered from 199 Establishments in 16 States

The Department of Labor, through the Bureau of Labor Statistics, has issued an exhaustive report on wages and hours of labor in the paper and pulp industry in 1923. Data were obtained from 199 establishments located in 16 States, and include 35,799 male and 3,262 female, wage earners. Of these, 13,011 were employed in pulp mills, and 26,050 in paper mills. The figures relating to pulp mill employes were limited to mills making pulp by the ground wood, sulphite,. or sulphate, processes.

The data for paper include mills making book paper, newsprint, wrapping paper and writing paper. The average earnings per hour in the pulp mills ranged from 27.3 cents in Louisiana to 49.1 cents in Michigan and Ohio.

The average hourly earnings in the paper mills ranged from 42.6 cents in the writing paper mills in Wisconsin to 65.9 cents in the book paper mills in New York. The average full time hours per week in the pulp mills ranged from 50.3 in New England to 67.3 in Louisiana; and in the paper mills they ranged from 48.1 in the newsprint mills in New England to 59.5 in the wrapping paper mills in Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia. Addition to tables showing in detail, for each branch of the industry the average hours per week, earnings per hour, and earnings per pay period of employes by occupation, sex, length of pay period, and region, the report contains a brief history of the industry. A description of operations and equipment, a glossary of occupations, and general information relating to changes in wage rates, overtime pay, bonuses etc.

SEATTLE DAILY CUTS PRICE

Union Record Goes from 3 to 2 Cents on Street, $9 to $5 by Mail

The Seattle Union Record, which at the first of the year was purchased from the labor unions which then controlled it, by a company headed by E. B. Ault editor and manager, and Saul Hass, managing editor, this week announced a reduction in subscription price.

The new rate reduces the street price from three cents to two to 10 cents a week delivered from 75 cents a month, and from a mail price of $9 a year to $5.

"Increased circulation, lower manufacturing costs, and better advertising patronage permit the Record to announce the reduced subscription price," the paper said in a published statement.

We estimate there are 1,500 families who are well able to afford a morning paper, but who will have to be sold in a high class, dignified manner. Roughnecks would not be able to gain admittance to the people about whom we are speaking. To such a man we will pay a small drawing account weekly, which will meet his expenses in our town, together with a very liberal commission. We can offer him an attractive selling proposition and will be glad to go into details with the right man. For further information address Box C-968, care Editor & Publisher.

OPENS NEW HOME

Cleveland Times Has House-Warming —Prints 56-page Edition

Fifteen thousand persons, it is estimated, inspected the new home of the Cleveland Times at Payne avenue and 22nd street, when it was formally opened to the public on April 17 and 18.

Coincident to the house-warming the Times published a 56-page edition.

Although it removed to its new home March 21, last, being compelled to desert its old home early because the building will be razed to make room for the new $80,000,000 Union station, the Times postponed formal opening of the structure until finishing touches had been put on it and the new equipment installed.

Launching of the new home saw the Times with a second Duplex Tubular press installed, two more Ludlows in use, four additional linotypes, making a battery of 14 now in use; another el-rod machine, additional stereotyping equipment and almost 100 per cent more equipment in the composing room. The paper is now equipped mechanically to care for all its needs for the next two years, and can issue, when necessary, a 40-page edition without an extra run of the presses.

George Moran, chairman, the Cleveland News and the Sunday News Leader, sent the Times a handsome floral piece on the opening day, while all of Cleveland's large banks, most of the big stores and scores of individuals and smaller firms also sent floral offerings, so that the foyer leading from the street to the business office was literally banked with blossoms when the doors were opened.

Commemorating the opening, the Times issued a house warming edition consisting of a 16-page news section and two 20-page special sections, 56 pages in all. It was packed about 80 per cent advertising and 20 per cent news matter, for the special section. It carried 60,000 agate lines of paid advertising, while 5,000 additional agate lines were in the news section. This was the first edition of that size ever issued in Cleveland, except by a Sunday paper.

ADVERTISING BUILT DODGE GOOD WILL

Systematic Capitalizing of Public Confidence Company's Policy Since Beginning—Goodwill Valued at $100,000,000

Appraisal of Dodge Brothersgood will value at more than $100,000,000 is one of the greatest tributes paid to advertising in the history of modern business, according to an account printed in the Wall Street Journal recently from its Detroit bureau. The caption of the company's announcmeent of the sale headed "World-Wide Good Will" was reproduced from one of a series of advertisements published just nine years ago. It was upon that series of good will advertisements that the Dodge Brothers' business was founded.

John F. Dodge at first loathed advertising. He held all sales managers in light esteem. In the first meeting with the man he had chosen to chart his merchandising and advertising course, he remarked in characteristic fashion—"Horace and I go out in the factory and sweat blood to save a tenth of a cent, and you fellows turn right around and throw away 10%."

The man who was to write the Dodge advertising seized upon this incident, in his own mind, as his theme forever after. "Here," he said to himself, "are two honest manufacturers. The thing to do is to capitalize them and through them the car." At the time of this meeting the car was not even built. It was not, when it appeared, the almost flawless mechanism it afterward became, but meanwhile the preparation of the public mind was under way.

Part of the program was a series of advertisements appearing at intervals glorifying the value of public good will. They were almost essays worded in a simple, human way that painted a picture of blunt honesty and integrity. They were aimed even more at the prospective dealer organization than at the public, but the public accepted them without question.

Probably never before had the familiar industrial phrase "good will" been so systematically capitalized. The changes were rung on it not merely in advertising, but in sales discussions, letters and public speeches, and swiftly a high conception of Dodge Brothers began to crystallize. The first of the series of advertisements was called "A Year's Growth in Good Will" and was followed by "Good Will Constantly spreading," "A Solid Wall of Good Will," and "One-Half Million Builders of Good Will." Other copy was interspersed which carried such headings as "A Good Name—The Master Salesman," "The Force of Friendly Thoughts," "A Circle That Never Stops Growing," and similar suggestive thoughts deeply implanted in public consciousness.

John Dodge was one of the first to grasp the significance of the process, although he admitted it was all new to him. After a while, with the unconscious ego of a strong man, he said of the man who was doing the job: "Say, that fellow just can't help saying things the way we want them said." The process of dramatizing honesty went on, making a scenario out of probity, good faith and good will, and the intangible nothing became a tremendous something.

Two weeks before he died, John Dodge made rather solemn acknowledgment of the whole thing, and asked the author of this advertising to help him select a successor to the sales manager who had superintended the entire process—and had then resigned—and incidentally the man who impressed upon the advertising man, the short sententious style which has ever since characterized Dodge advertising, and likewise originated the present outdoor advertising idea.

Meanwhile, a brilliant competitor of John Dodge, one of the most interesting figures in the industry today, has summarized the matter about as picturesquely as John Dodge himself would have done.

"John," he said, "is a great manufacturer—with one exception, to my way of thinking, the greatest in all the world. But"—pointing to a Dodge advertisement—"Fifty per cent. of all that he is and possesses today he owes to the peculiar and individual way in which he was made known as a great manufacturer."

Two days before he died, John Dodge and the man who had made him known sat side by side at a New York luncheon and planned for the future. Then came the tragic end and, because, meanwhile, another figure in the industry, Walter P. Chrysler, had called him in to help rehabilitate the Maxwell, the Good Will Man passed out of the Dodge picture.

BUSINESS TICKLER

WHAT are the commercial faults, causing economic losses, in your city? Do all the people regard Monday as "wash-day" thereby creating an unnatural and expensive business "peak" for the first day of the week? Newspaper advertising, sold to laundries, would correct it. Is Saturday the "shopping day" to the exclusion of all other days? Locate and correct such false and uneconomic conditions by advertising!

IN its classified columns the Los Angeles (Cal.) Evening Herald has increased the pulling power of some of the business personals appealing to women readers by arranging them under the heading "Woman's Realm." Typical ads that come under this classification are beauty culture schools, beauty operators, hat shops, and other specialty shops, such as brassiere and corset shops, children's day nurseries, etc. Such a column can add materially to any paper's classified revenue and increase the returns to advertisers.—Harold J. Ashe, Long Beach, Cal.

The business district of Des Moines is peculiarly situated. The Des Moines river divides the city into east and west side. The last few years the west side has become the retail district. To stimulate advertising and business for the east side, the Evening Tribune every two weeks runs an East Des Moines double truck, with news and advertising of the east side. The news matter averages about 15 per cent.—E. R. Appel, Des Moines, Ia.

Why not get your local automobile dealers to advertise used cars in display form instead of using the classified columns? This will bring a larger space for your paper. A Newark Sunday paper using display used car advertisements gets two pages of this business every issue.—Joseph N. Medresch.

Draw more attention to your advertising and incidentally please your advertisers by running a small box headed something like:—"Hidden Treasure in Today's Ads." The classified page can be included in this scheme. Underneath the heading will be printed a few words referring to several special bargains advertised elsewhere in the paper, and written after this style. "A $50 a week job is advertised on the clasified page and a Ford Roadster is offered for $35. On page ten men's $3 shirts are advertised for $1.95 while on page eleven ladies' Spring hats have been reduced from $7.50 to $5," etc.—Harold Nuttall, Bellaire (O.) Leader.

On the anniversary of some local contractor's start in business in your city try for a special page for him carrying his own copy and the copy of concerns whose products he uses or with whom he does business.—F. H. Williams.

The Junior College at Miami, Okla., is a young institution and is not publishing a year-book this year. The Miami News-Record will publish, about ten days before commencement, a "year-book edition" and is expecting to land advertising about graduating presents, congratulations to the class, and the like. This ought to be a good idea for small city high schools and colleges that do not publish annuals.—John B. Owen, Miami (Okla.) News-Record.

Divide a full page into equal spaces (4" single or larger), sell the spaces to regular advertisers, using for copy, the cut of a telephone, the phone number, and business slogan of the advertiser, blank lines on which to write the advertiser's name and address. Offer three prizes of 5, 3, and 2 dollars to readers sending in the neatest and most correct answers. Run the page once and again a week later giving correct answers and names of prize winners. This page can be run as a Display Clasified or regular Display page.—J. J. B., Binghamton, N. Y.

Additional space can be sold in a not too flourishing advertising field by adopting the following plan: Obtain a list of the photoplays coming to the principal movie houses for the next three weeks or more. Find out what books these photoplays are written from, and then take your list to the book stores, and get them to advertise what books in the list they are selling. The list of photoplays can be used as the basis of a news story on your moving picture pages.—Henry R. Helsby, Olean (N. Y.) Times.

How about a half-page of ads for phonograph records, from your music houses, tied up with the week's radio programs as published by your radio editor? Radio fans hear and enjoy a number over the radio and if properly stimulated by timely advertising would be glad to get it in record form.—F. J. McEniry.

Publish a complete list of your advertisers in directory form once each month under the caption: "Progressive Merchants and Business Men of (name of city)."—B. A. T.

HUNCHES

ONE DOLLAR WILL BE PAID FOR EACH "HUNCH" PUBLISHED

FOLLOWING the close of the World War, many patriotic societies were formed. These, in addition to the regular branches of service, such as Army, Navy, Marine Corps, National Guards, Red Cross, etc., make it possible for a newspaper to feature "Patriotic News" under a special heading and attract thousands of readers. The plan was launched in Springfield, Mo., several weeks ago and is now counted one of the biggest features. The various organizations gladly report all news happenings for the week.—W. H. Brunkhorst, Springfield (Mo.) Republican.

Tennis will soon be in full swing in every city. It is a game for young and old. Who is the oldest champion? The youngest champion? The best female player? Where are the best courts to play in your city? Do clubs and schools give opportunity for diversion along this line? Such an article should appeal to the sporting nature of a large number of readers.—H. Wilbur Polson, Geneseo, Ill.

Most cities have a retail credit bureau that operates quietly but efficiently in determining whether you will be granted credit by Blank's furniture store or the corner grocery. The bureau does not shun publicity, but neither does it hunt it. If your city has such a bureau, the secretary can give you much interesting news material.—B. A. Teeters, Springfield, O.

With the coming of spring another long debated evil again faces us; namely, preserving our wild flowers that are threatened with extermination by careless and thoughtless people who must not only pick all they desire but destroy all they do not want. Laws are being enacted, others under debate to protect the various types of wild flowers. Discriptions of the flowers threatened, pictures, history, etc., with cartoons of the offenders would make a fine feature.—C. E. Pellissier, Boston, Mass.

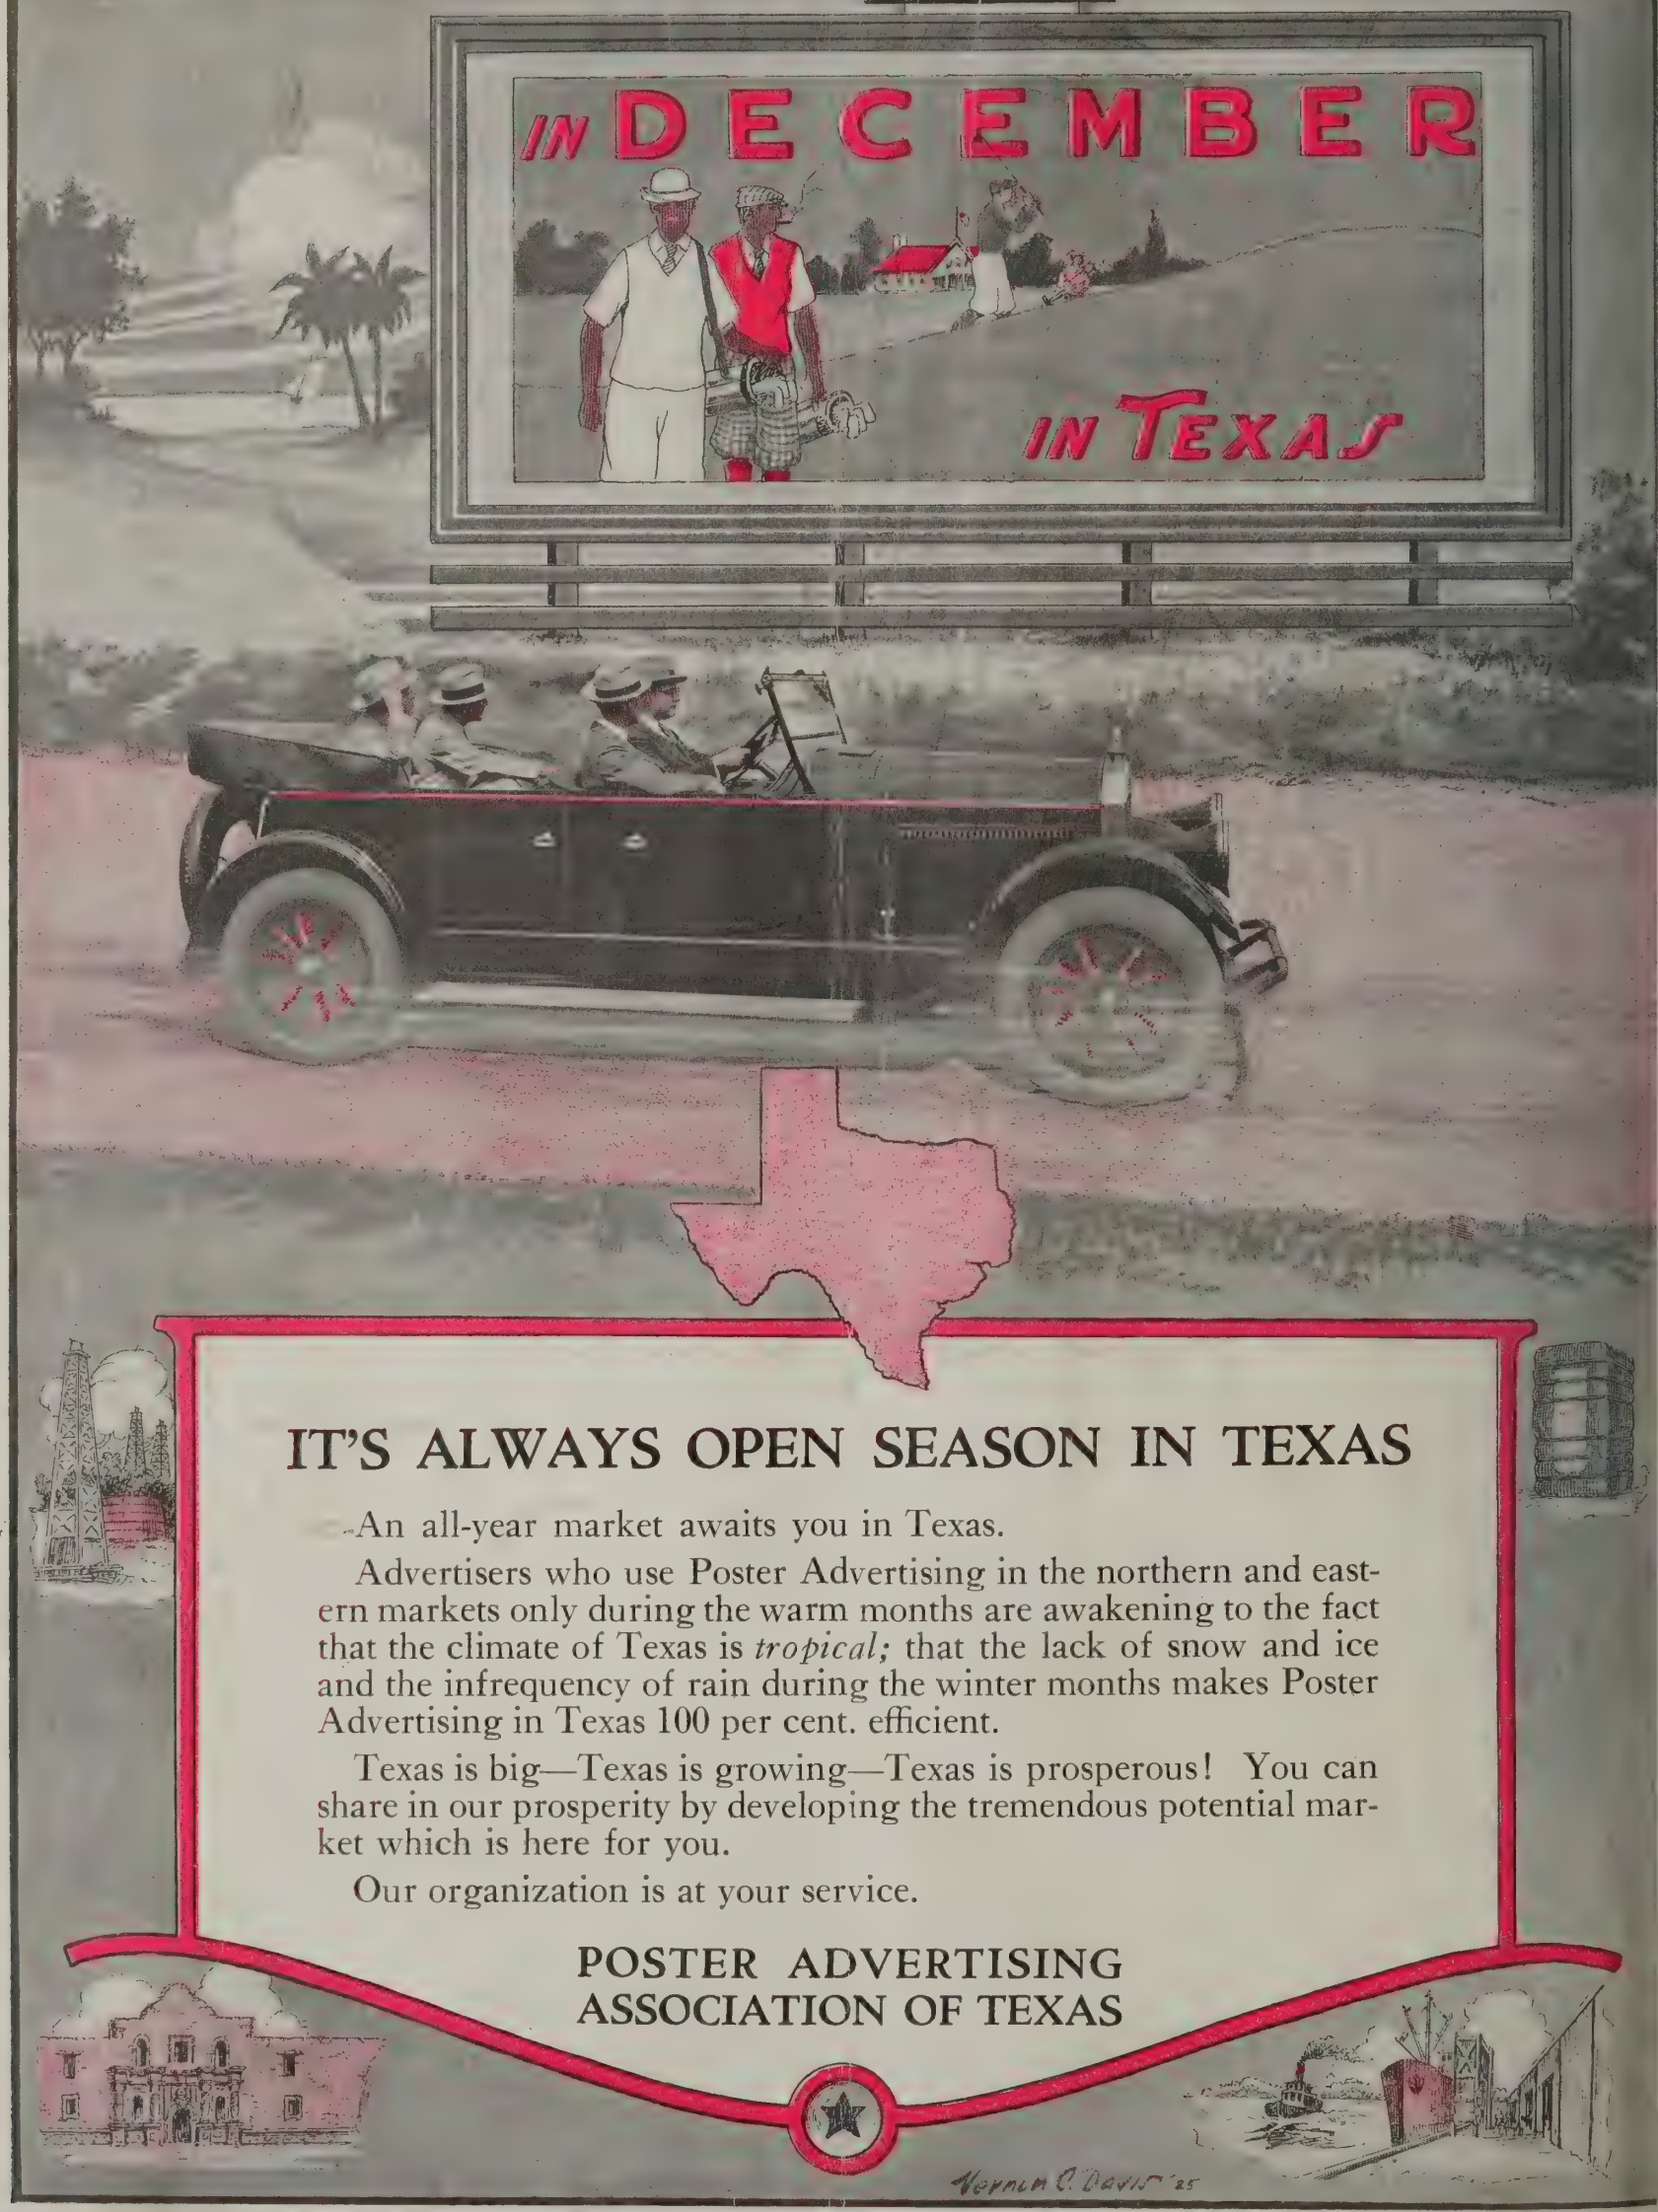
THE GREAT DAILY CIRCULATION OF NEW ENGLAND NEWSPAPERS

exceeding two millions in a population of seven and a half million, indicates the avidity of the people for news and their ability to assimilate and digest advertising.



Advertising in New England will reach over seven and a half per cent of America's population and more than half of these people live in thirty-nine cities of over 30,000 population.

In New England advertising is read as much as news, as will be indicated by the number of actual sales credited by local advertiser to individual pieces of copy.

The National Advertiser who will use the daily newspapers wisely—which means intensively, either in group or by locality—surely puts in motion the greatest stimulus for sales.

The Economics of Distribution and Consumption in Chicago

Based on its large and prosperous population, two factors make Chicago one of the richest and most economically served markets in the world for the national advertiser.

The first of these factors is, of course, the vast number of retail outlets serving a population of more than 3,300,000, in an area less than 40 miles from center to circumference. Thirty-eight of the forty-eight states of the Union have a smaller population than Chicago alone. Low distribution costs, transportation and warehousing charges—all the elements of successful merchandising—are available here on an economical basis unexcelled anywhere in the world.

The second factor is the economy and effectiveness of advertising coverage. One medium—The Chicago Daily News—reaches and influences the buying decisions of the great majority of financially competent households in Chicago and its immediate suburbs. In this territory is concentrated 94 per cent of The Daily News approximately 400,000 circulation—1,200,000 daily readers.

Local advertisers, familiar with this fact, capitalize it by placing the preponderance of their advertising in The Daily News—and national advertisers who have or seek distribution here can wisely follow the lead and advice of local experts.

The thoroughness, economy and effectiveness of its advertising coverage place The Daily News, year by year, far in the lead of all other Chicago daily papers in the volume of display advertising printed.

PHILADELPHIA
a City of Homes

The American home has ever been the ideal of its statesmen and other forward-looking men.

The right home life has done more toward producing good Americans than any other agency.

People who live in their own homes, who are proud of their homes, are naturally the best prospects for any advertiser.

Perhaps in no other American city is this so strongly evident as in Philadelphia—the City of Homes.

Philadelphia fathers and mothers are ever on the alert for things to improve their homes and to add attraction and charm.

In all America there is no other city where there are so many separate dwellings, and likewise there is no other city that presents such attractive possibilities to the advertiser.

Rousing A. A. C. W. Convention Calls For World Peace and Understanding

C. King Woodbridge Unanimously Elected President—Philadelphia Next Convention City—International Atmosphere of London Intensified—4000 Attend and Texas Hospitality Is Overflowing

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

By ARTHUR T. ROBB, Jr.

HOUSTON, Texas, May 13.—World peace and universal understanding have been the keynotes of the 21st convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World which adjourned today to meet next year at Philadelphia.

President Lou Holland retires after three of the greatest years in the association's history, with his ideals a permanent part of its philosophy. The international air which marked the London program has, if anything, been intensified at Houston, with a strong Pan-American representation at the convention and a Pan-American trade conference in simultaneous session.

C. King Woodbridge, New York national advertiser, was unanimously elected to the presidency, his strongest opponent, Homer J. Buckley, of Chicago, declining consideration by the joint assembly. Mr. Buckley was elected chairman of the joint assembly. Jesse H. Neal, of New York, was unanimously re-elected secretary-treasurer.

Philadelphia as the convention city of 1926 was the unanimous choice of the board of club presidents, which in a five-hour session Tuesday night considered the claims of Philadelphia and St. Petersburg, Florida.

St. Petersburg made a vigorous fight under the leadership of W. C. "Pap" Freeman, who headed a large delegation and a very healthy band of Scotsmen. Philadelphia won for two reasons—one, the fact that it celebrates the 150th anniversary of American Independence; second, the fact that the last two conventions have been held at London and Houston, distant from American Advertising centers. Attendance here is estimated at 4,000, but association leaders see the need for another large convention before applying its forces to the stabilization of Florida business desired by the St. Petersburg people.

Montreal and Detroit are also interested in obtaining the 1927 meeting.

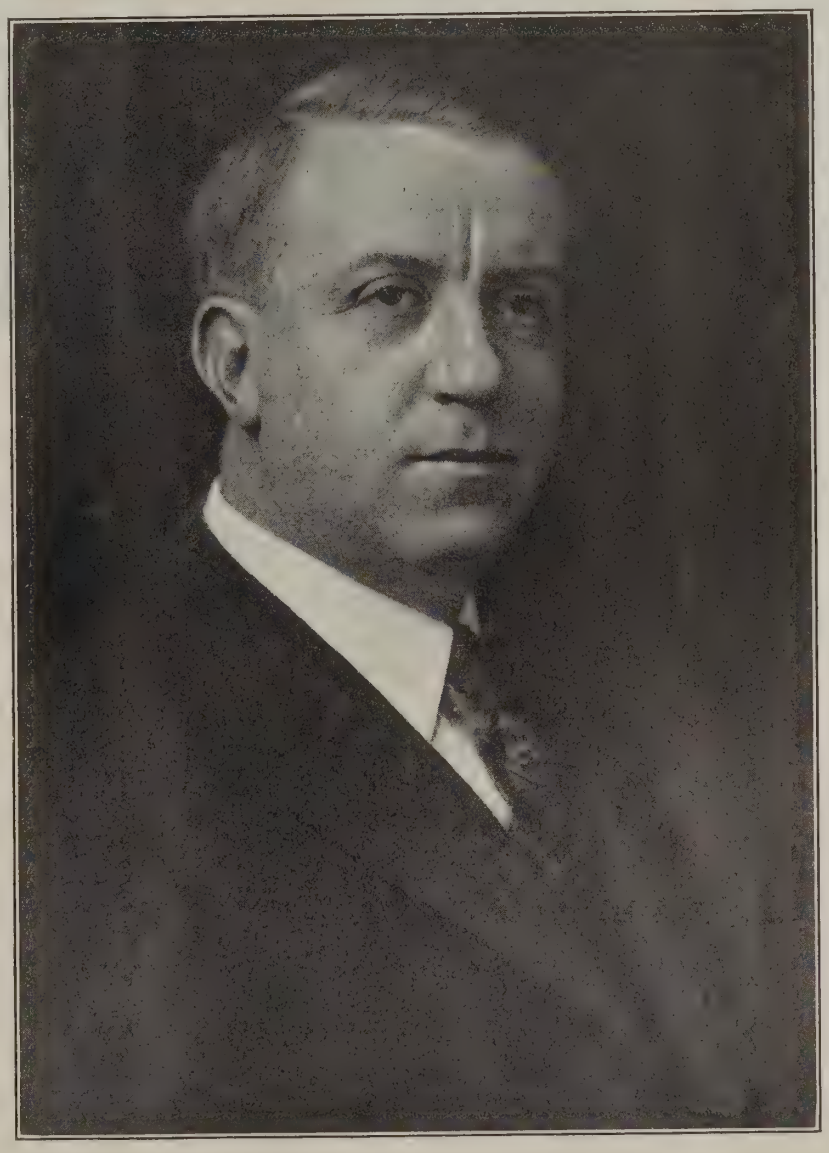
By-laws of the association were changed to remove from the convention the veto of the convention city chosen by the club presidents, and vest this power in the executive committee. The club presidents elected W. S. Patton, president of the Houston Advertising Association, chairman of their board, and Sam Blair, Peoria, secretary. Mr. Patton thus becomes a member of the executive committee.

Incorporation of the National Vigilance work was reported by Herbert S. Houston Thursday. Fifteen directors will govern the Corporation, five nominated by the Better Business Bureaus, five by sustaining members and five by the Executive Committee, A. A. C. W.

Changes in the constitution were adopted as proposed by Rowe Stewart, Philadelphia, as follows:

Re-arrangement of districts, creating district Fourteen, British Empire, except Canada: District Fifteen, Canada: District Sixteen, Australia, New Zealand: District Seventeen, Europe except Great Britain: District Eighteen, the orient.

Creating the office of Honorary International Vice-President for recognition of distinguished service by others than Americans.



Clarifying powers of joint assembly as resolutions committee.

Waiving initiation fee and regular dues for new clubs remote from America and for college advertising fraternities.

Making the publication of Associated Advertising optional with Executive Committee, rather than mandatory by the constitution.

Frank Leroy Blanchard, teacher of advertising for twenty years was publicly recognized by President Holland after Paul Cherington reported for the Executive Committee.

NEW LEADER OF WORLD AD-CLUBS

C. KING WOODBRIDGE

Homer J. Buckley, chairman of the joint assembly presented these resolutions, which were adopted:

Commending President Coolidge's governmental economy program.

Favoring an international conference to promote world peace.

Approving census of distribution by Department of Commerce.

Commending the proposed Texas Centennial Celebration.

Thanking Latin-American governments for their participation in the convention.

Approving movement for return to "reign of law based on righteousness."

Urging clubs to appoint a special member to co-operate with Near East Relief and Golden Rule Sunday.

Thanking Governor Ferguson; Houston for its "princely Hospitality;" Houston newspapers; President and government of Mexico; the City of Galveston; Association officers and committees and convention speakers.

George W. Hopkins, voicing joint assembly's inability to draft an adequate resolution of appreciation of President Holland's services, asked all members to write a letter expressing their views, with a view of binding them and presenting them to President Holland with a suitable memorial.

Nomination of Philadelphia was made by W. S. Patton, chairman of the Board of Presidents.

E. J. Cattell, Philadelphia city statistician responded by presenting the Houston Advertising Association with a replica of the Liberty Bell.

R. H. Cornell was elected an honorary life member of the Houston Advertising Association in recognition of his services to the convention.

Election of President Woodbridge and Secretary-Treasurer Neal concluded the session.

The convention adjourned for a barbecue and rodeo at Hermann Park.

President Holland and Mayor Holcombe opened the general sessions Monday with addresses of welcome to delegates from foreign countries. Responses were made by Sir William Veno, of Manchester, England; Arturo Elias, Mexico City; Samuel Tolon, representing Cuba, Norman S. H. Catts, who made the journey from Sydney, Australia, to tell Americans what a great market his country affords them; Henry George, of Geneva, Switzerland; Luis F. Racinos, San Salvador and J. C. Muniz, Brazilian Consul General at New York. The responses were followed by Secretary Hoover's address (printed on page 5 of this issue) and an address by L. W. Baldwin, president of the Missouri Pacific Railroad, who described his road's solution of the problem of public relations.

"The Missouri Pacific system lines" he said, "decided that the proper and fair way to get information before the general public was to purchase advertising space in newspapers and periodicals. Having done it we did not attempt to influence public opinion with beautifully painted illustrations or highly colored word pictures. We simply approached the various subjects—especially those about which there appeared to be the greatest misunderstanding—and we undertook to tell it in our plain words, without any embellishments whatever, the plain truth about those various matters. Having told our story, or I should say having written it, to be inserted in the display space we had purchased, we felt that the public was entitled to know the source of the statement. Therefore, each statement was signed and the truth of each was vouched for.

"We have discovered something else interesting. Having adopted this method of telling our story to the public Governor "Ma" Ferguson welcomed the convention to Texas Saturday night under flags of many nations. Left to right on the auditorium stage: Marcellus E. through the press, and in other ways that were available to us, we found the press anxious to get the real news of the railroads."

"Organized advertising in Australia has concluded that the most effective method of improving the standard of advertising there is to first improve the status of the advertising practitioner," declared Mr. Catts.

Mr. Catts stated that the first organization of the advertising movement in Australia led to a certain amount of over expansion, the results of which, however, have not been harmful but had led the membership of the movement to take stock of their problems and their progress and to reorganize their future program in a systematic manner.

"The Advertising Association of Australia and New Zealand has already established a form of conditional qualification of advertising men, but the N. S. W. Institute, the only incorporated body of advertising men in Australia, has made clear its determination to carry this issue even further.

"Membership is now the privilege only of those who qualify by and through an approved course of academic and practical education and in addition satisfy a board of examiners, as to their executive ability, training and experience."

One of the striking features of the first business session, was the presentation to President Holland, of an Olivewood gavel made in the carpenter shop in Nazareth by an orphan boy—a ward of America—by Miss L. M. Mackibbin.

The City Auditorium, where the general sessions were held, was also the scene of the Sunday night entertainment. The St. Petersburg Highlanders Band opened the festivities, which ended with a concert by the Mexican Garrison Musicians. Between the clamor of the Floridans and the selections of the Mexican soldiers, which at times resembled symphony orchestral rather than military band music, were interesting addresses by the Rt. Rev. Clinton S. Quin, Episcopal Bishop of Texas, and Senator Morris Sheppard.

Bishop Quin spoke on the "Moral Influence for World Peace," and again sounded the kevnote of the convention, whose major objective through all its sessions is to be world peace

Senator Sheppard's subject was "The Glories of Texas and the Relations of Texas to World Peace."

"I have convictions that it is the duty of the United States to take its place in the affairs of the world," said Bishop Quin. "I cannot enthuse over certain proposals that are held by certain United States Senators in regard to world peace.

"I am simple minded enough to believe that world peace is possible. I also believe that when we get enough people of the same mind we will have world peace. Certainly there are none to deny but that world peace is desirable."

His remarks that if the destiny of the world were placed in the hands of young men in a generation we would have peace. He declared diplomacy was now in the hands of older men, the men who did not have to do the fighting, which was why peace had been so long delayed.

But Bishop Quin declared there was hopes for world peace in sight and an object on which the world had so set its heart would ultimately be accomplished. He thought a method would be devised for the arbitration of all economic disputes.

As yet we have not passed the stage, he said, where we weigh war in the cost of human life and the loss of blood. When that time comes when we will quit talking reparations in terms of boundary lines and dollars and cents, he said. And when we come to weighing reparations and losses in terms of life and blood, the only reparations that will suit will be a cessation of all war.

Senator Sheppard in his address painted a glowing picture of the size and resources of Texas and its wonderful possibilities. He thrilled the audience with an eloquent account of its traditions and history and declared Texas drew its citizenship from North and South, from —nearly every state of the Union and many foreign lands.

He closed with a fervent appeal for world peace and told of how a statute of Christ had been erected on the boundary line between Peru and Argentina.

"On the pedestal the inscription reads 'Sooner shall these mountains crumble to dust than Chileans and Argentinians break the peace which at the feet of Christ, the Redeemer, they have sworn to maintain.'

"God hasten the breaking of the day when on the boundary of every nation on the Globe a similar figure shall lift its warning figure to teach eternal love, unchanging brotherhood and everlasting peace."

Reuben H. Donnelley, Chicago, former association president, presided over Tuesday's general sessions, whose speakers included Senator Herman Bingham, of Connecticut, Martin J. Insull, of Chicago; Edith McClure-Patterson, Dayton, Ohio; Mrs. Anita Simpson, Chicago; and George Waverly Briggs, Dallas.

Three outstanding gains which accrued to Great Britain following the 20th annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World in London last year, were described by Major Wynne Williams, advertisement manager of the London Times, before the general session May 11.

"Our country's gain from the convention was immense," he said. "I refer only to advertising gains. The wonderful work the convention did in cementing Anglo-American friendship does not now come within my scope.

"It has achieved so much that even now, one year afterwards, it is impossible for anybody to give anything like completely the advantages we have gained.

"It has finally established on the finest possible lines the advertising club movement in Great Britain.

"It has turned 'Truth in Advertising' from slogan into a crusade. Care has always been shown along these lines, particularly by our publishers, but now a Vigilance Committee has been organized. It is called the National Vigilance Committee of District 14, and it will act on the accepted principle that an important structure needs a solid and sound foundation. It is now carefully preparing the ground for the important work that lies ahead of it. Horace Imber is chairman. Already the assistance and coordination of many trading bodies has been obtained, and also a whole time investigator has been appointed.

"Thirdly, the London convention is undoubtedly the greatest advertisement advertising has ever had in Great Britain. It has been estimated that about half a million dollars worth of newspaper and magazine space in Great Britain alone was given to advertising during the month of the convention? It has, undoubtedly, caused many thousands of people to consider seriously advertisng who had never given a thought to the subject before."

We like to think of America as being in the forefront of the world's progress," Hiram Bingham, United States Senator from Connecticut, declared in an address on "Aviation for World Progress" before the general sessions May 12.

"In the many arts and sciences this is true. Certainly in the art of advertising we have made giant strides and have the right to be proud of our achievements. We fully appreciate the importance of the very best kind of advertising conducted on the highest plane.

"Unfortunately, in commercial aviation, we have nothing to boast about. We can take pride in the fact that American genius, American invention and American courage, made flying possible and have enabled our heroic young aviators to

ADVERTISING REDUCES BOTH COSTS AND PRICES

—Secretary Hoover to A. A. C. W.

In Houston Address Secretary of Commerce Says Old Idea of Advertising as Economic Waste Has Been Exploded—Discusses Distribution and Praises Truth Policy

ADVERTISING has "truly become one of the vital forces in our entire industrial and commercial system," Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, declared in his address of welcome opening the general business sessions of the 21st annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World in Houston, May 11.

Secretary Hoover in comprehensive form summed up the social advantages of advertising, discussed its aid in the elimination of waste in distribution, and paid high tribute to the A. A. C. W., declaring that the slogan "Truth in Advertising" was the finest proof that this business is evolving toward highly ethical standards."

"Advertising was not always looked upon as a vital part of our economic system," he said.

"There was a time when advertising had about the same economic and moral status as the barker outside the circus tent. But it has found itself a most serious purpose. The older economists taught the essential influences of 'wish,' 'want' and 'desire' as motive forces in economic progress. You have taken over the job of creating desire.

"You still have another job—creating good will in order to make desire stand hitched. In economics the torments of desire in turn create demand, and from demand we create production, and thence around the cycle we land with increased standards of living.

"No matter how fine an addition to human comfort or pleasure a given article or service may be, unless there is a diffusion of knowledge and information with respect to it, it will not itself become quickly accepted and incorporated into our standards of living. Our standards of living are much higher today than they would have been were it not for the part played by advertising.

"These standards of living are sort of built up in layers. The lower layers are the plainest food, clothing and shelter. Primeval nature herself stirs up enough emotions through hunger, cold and storms to keep 'desire' vividly active in this end of the scale of living. But the moment we have got beyond this stimulus the advertiser has full swing in stimulating 'desire' for better food, better clothing, better shelter, entertainment and so on over the whole range of ten thousand and one things that go to make up superimposed layers of rising living standards. These upper layers have been added to, widened, and become more general because of advertising.

"The greatest single addition to our living standards in a generation has been the automobile. It has increased our national efficiency, stretched our national vision, improved our national health, and it has added some percent of sheer joy, some dangers, and much excitement to life. I cannot believe for a moment that we should have had such a diffusion and such a general application of this great invention had it not been for the force of advertising. It would no doubt have crept slowly into use over a few centuries if we were without this powerful agency, as did the first revolutionary discovery in transportation—the wheel cart.

"The news and use of that great invention traveled only as fast as some neighbor saw it with his own eyes. If you gentlemen had had the job of putting it over you might have speeded up the advance of civilization a few centuries.

"One profound economic effect of advertising is ofttimes overlooked—its influence upon production. The general knowledge and rapid distribution of an article, which can only be accomplished through advertising, creates large production and thus lower costs and prices. Modern advertising is the hand-maiden of mass production. Moreover, your convincing announcements of a multitude of improvements on everything spreads a restless pillow for every competitor and drives him to further and faster exertions to keep apace.

HON. HERBERT HOOVER

"There is still another phase of advertising that has always interested me, and that is the impulse advertising has given to the distribution of news, information, good cheer and educational material to our people. Obviously, were it not for the vast extension of national advertising, we should never have had the fine development of our periodical magaznies; and were it not for the growth of local newspaper advertising, our publishers would not be able to produce the great journals which are of such incalculable value.

"Some say that without advertising the subscriber would carry the burden: that is, he would pay the largely increased price necessary to support a publication which did not contain advertising. But all this is disproved by a simple test; publications which attempt to circulate without advertising seldom go far and generally fail.

"The notion that advertising in its broad sense is an economic waste has been long since abandoned. I have already mentioned its social use in advancing standards of living and its economic influence upon mass production and thus its contribution to lowered costs. More directly it is an economical form of distribution.

"The steady increase in volume of advertising in our news and periodical press is only one proof that it is such an economical form of distribution, for if it did not secure greater results at less expense it would decrease, not increase. The consumer, searching for article or service, turns to the advertising columns of our press to learn just where to go after it, and so avoids the waste motion and loss of time and strength involved in blind search for fulfillment of his desire. All these things eliminate waste motion and time.

"But there are some economic wastes which can be eliminated by the advertising managers. One of these you are already attacking through your development of research activities. An advertising agency is a selling agency. The indispensable attribute of salesmanship is an understanding of the market. Competent salesmanship requires that its efforts be expended in territory and by methods which shall reach the maximum number of buyers at the minimum cost. It follows logically that sound market analysis must be an integral part of advertising salesmanship. All this requires hard, intensive, not superficial analysis. Research in these matters is like that in any other branch of economics. It takes time to develop experience and method. You have already gone a long way in this direction.

"There is another economic waste through advertising which has given your organization great concern and is of the most profound concern to the public. I do not refer to the field of fraudulent representiation, for that is simply porch climbing. What I do refer to is the advertising of articles which do not really contribute either to usefulness, comfort, or even luxury.

"To attain a permanence in public confidence, to maintain a position as part of the economic machinery of the country, the advertising executive and the medium need to see to it that the desire they create is satisfied by the article they present. To establish the good will of the public toward producer of goods and service is not alone a necessity to success, in advertising, it is also a necessity to the advertising executive and the advertising medium if advertising is to maintain its influence.

"Great advancement has been made, so great in fact that while advertising at one time may have been looked upon as a nuisance and an intrusion for the beguiling of the credulous only, it has now come to take a place as commercial news and as an economical method of salesmanship. Its first step in progress was when the medium, recognizing its responsibility to the readers, exercised censorship over extravagant, distasteful, and misleading copy. This gave more credibility to truthful advertisements themselves. The next great step was your organized action of advertising managers, advertisers and advertising mediums through moral suasion Vigilance Committees and Better Business Bureaus.

"It is not too much to say that from all the many inventions and the multitudes of ideas that are poured forth daily in the preparation of advertising there is emerging a science and a profession.

"But the milestone which will mark the passage from a trade to a profession is the establishment of group ethics. It is upon this subject that I wish to lay some emphasis. The group characteristic of law and medicine and engineering is not alone the training of skill required, it is the elevated code of relations with fellow men, the incorporation of responsibility to the community into the daily task, the insistence upon a high sense of service given, that marks their distinction. The use of the slogan, truth in advertising, and the vigilance agencies which you have set up to protect the consumer are themselves the finest proof that this business is evolving toward highly ethical standards.

"Advertising unfortunately still has to contend with some residue of unethical practices and with accumulated prejudices which arise from the methods of many years ago. But in the organizations which you have set up, the principles which you have advocated, the practical steps which you have undertaken, we are seeing a new day in the ethics of advertising itself. And just so far as those ethical principles are embodied in practice, just that far will the public grow in confidence in advertising and just that far have you progressed into a profession."

HOUSTON, Tex., May 12—During the concluding sessions of the World Advertising Convention, President Holland read a telegram from President Coolidge, conveying well wishes as follows:

"In addressing the Associated Advertising Clubs Convention, I hope you will be good enough to express my deep regret at my inability to be present and to convey my cordial greetings and my very best wishes that the convention will be completely successful and will accomplish its every worthy aspiration.

"CALVIN COOLIDGE"

LOU HOLLAND HONORED AT CONVENTION DINNER

Prominent members of every delegation to the 21st annual convention of the A. A. C. W. gathered at a dinner given in the Houston Club, May 10, in honor of the retiring President, Lou Holland.

HOUSTON OPENS NEW CITY AUDITORIUM WITH WELCOME TO A. A. C. W.

Governor Ferguson, Mayor Holcombe, and Business Leaders Greet Delegates Who Throng Hall—Holland Again Sounds World-Peace Keynote

HOUSTON, Tex., May 10—Governor Ferguson of Texas, Mayor Holcombe of Houston, H. H. Haines, manager of the city's Chamber of Commerce and President Patton of the Advertising Club formally welcomed the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World at the City Auditorium Saturday night.

Lou Holland, President of the Associated Advertising Clubs, responded and in brief words rang the keynote of what he prophesied was to be the greatest convention in the history of the association.

"You will remember that a year ago 19 nations of the world signed at London resolutions for world peace." Mr. Holland said. "Let us hope and pray that something comes forth from this convention that will help to secure for the world international peace."

Houston and Texas welcomed the delegates beneath the softly colored lights of the magnificent newly finished Auditorium that was gaily bedecked with the mingled flags of all nations.

It welcomed the delegates with song and music of two orchestras and an ensemble of harps, and representatives of scores of advertising clubs of this country and a dozen foreign lands were personally presented to the assembled thousands by Robert H. Cornell, and filed by and personally received greetings from the mayor and governor and others on the platform.

Now and then came women delegates and the band always let out a blare of music to add to their welcome.

At the close of the speeches and music and formal words of welcome, the hosts and their guests joined in a dance that lasted until the hours of early morning.

It was a colorful scene, with the bright colors of the women's gowns, with red and orange predominating.

The grand march was led by Governor Ferguson and Lou Holland. Just behind came former Governor James E. Ferguson with Mrs. Oscar Holcombe.

The audience sent up a cheer of greeting at the sight of Governor Ferguson and the other notables on the platform. Mayor Holcombe presided. In a very brief speech he welcomed the delegates to Houston.

"Houston is proud on this great occasion." he said. "She is proud to have with her tonight such a representative body of men, representing all sections of the world. But not only in idle words do we expect to express to you our welcome. We expect to show it to you in deeds and our policy shall be to so entertain you that you will want to come back to us again."

The mayor then introduced Mrs. Ferguson as the first woman governor of the United States. Mrs. Ferguson extolled in a brief address the glories of Texas and spoke of the honor Texas felt that these men and women from all nations were to visit the historic field of San Jacinto.

Mr. Haines then in a brief address welcomed the advertising men on behalf of the business interests of Houston.

William S. Patton told the delegates Houston had long looked forward to this occasion and now that the convention was here he wanted all the delegates to see not only Houston, but to join in the circle tours and see the great commercial possibilities of Texas.

President Holland in his response to these addresses of welcome, praised the spirit of Houston at Atlantic City two years ago when the Houston delegation seconded the nomination of London and said he was glad the convention had now met in this Southern city.

He predicted this convention would be the most notable in the history of the association.

"These splendid words of welcome and what we have already seen here makes us feel welcome to Texas," said Holland. "Texas is a pioneer state. But recently she has pioneered in a new field—by electing a woman as governor. I think it means a new era in the politics of the country and I for one hope it does.

"I want to speak a word of praise for the energy and initiative with which you do things down here. Two weeks ago I came here and saw them putting stucco on these walls. I saw workmen scraping the floors. And I said then that this auditorium would never be completed in time for the convention. But I didn't know you so well. I was wrong for tonight we are assembled in the finest auditorium in which the associated advertising clubs have ever met."

And when he closed Robert Cornell read a cablegram from the head of the advertising club of Osaka, Japan, expressing the wishes that the convention might do something to secure world peace. Reading of this telegram brought applause.

Before the speeches many delegates had filed by on the platform and been presented to the audience and the Governor and Mayor. Among these were:

Sir William Veno, of Manchester, England.

Major Wynne William, president of the Thirty Club, of London.

J. Parks, of the Publicity Club, of London.

ewspaper Executives Seek Means to Develop Home Business at Houston Meet—Carroll Re-elected President—Ethics Pledge Renewed

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

OUSTON, Tex., May 14.—Develop- ment of new lines of local business, pplementing department store adver- ng now considered near maximum s the main thought of the well attended eting of the Association, of Newspaper vertising executives, which ended to- y. All officers were re-elected as llows:

President, Frank T. Carroll, Indian- olis News; Vice-President, W. E. nahue, Chicago Tribune; Directors: L. Shuman, Fort Worth Star-Tele- am; Harvey R. Young, Columbus Dis- tch; J. W. Simpson, Philadelphia Bul- in; C. P. Falne, Peoria Journal-Tran- ript; W. J. Hofmann, Portland Ore- nian; R. A. Turnaquist, Milwaukee urnal; A. L. Poorman, Providence urnal; W. E. Donahue and Frank T. rroll; Secretary-Treasurer, Don idge, Indianapolis News.

Adherence to the code of ethics adopted Columbus last year was again pledged a formal resolution, presented by W. Bowman, Southbend Tribune, resolu- ns Committee Chairman, who also oposed the Association's thanks to ouston, the State of Texas, Governor rguson, Mayor Holcombe, Houston wspapers, clubs and civic organizations, . E. Foster and R. H. Cornell.

He also proposed thanks to George rbach for last year's London program.

C. P. Stone, reported for the Auditing ommittee that the Association has ,300 balance.

C. K. Woodbridge, new A. A. C. W. esident, asked the newspaper men to ink of advertising in terms of its benefit the public.

A. L. Shuman followed with the sug- stion that a trophy be awarded at hiladelphia next year for the most con- ructive paper read at the convention.

Although many suggestions were made the final session regarding definition local and national advertising, no con- usions were drawn from the conflicting pinions. The question remains ir- ducible to general solution.

Marcellus E. Foster, the two-in-one ditor and publisher of The Houston hronicle welcomed the newspaper ex- cutives to town at an unofficial session n Monday morning. He told the story hat Texan, never tire of, the rise of he state under six flags from the breech louted regimé of the Tejas Indians to he present empire of wealth and activi- y.

The newspaper men then adjourned to ear Secretary Hoover in the auditorium cross the street.

Another unofficial session was held uesday when the newspaper executives oined the classified advertising manag- rs at the latter's meeting. President rvin, of the latter, turned the meeting ver to President Carroll, who asked arl P. Slane, publisher Peoria Journal- ranscript to define the relations be- ween classified advertising and other di- isions of the department.

"Classified and display advertising taffs should be so much a part of one nother that they can hardly be known part," said Mr. Slane. "Classified ad- rtising should be a stepping stone to display for the advertiser and it can be sed as a valuable auxiliary to national chedules, both in obtaining salesmen and s a 'teaser' copy to stimulate local in- erest.

"Classified also affords an opportunity or the small local advertiser to supple- ent his display space, to keep everlast- ngly at it, within the limits of his ap- propriation, to the exclusion of novel- ies, blotters, and other forms of pub- licity which are often wholly waste of money. Classified should be the channel for the 'pin money' expenditures from the advertising appropriation.

"We are accustomed to regard our lo- cal room as the builder of good will, but I believe that the advertising staff is just as great a factor in that regard as the news force."

Carl Owings, Calgary Albertan, gave his opinion that the best display solici- tors were recruited from the classified staff, and proved it by telling his audi- ence that when he returns to Calgary he moves from the classified manager's desk to that of the advertising manager.

President Irvin briefly delineated the fundamentals of classified advertising. "Display advertising seeks the reader while classified advertising is sought by the reader. Display advertising fights for position. Every classified advertisement in a properly made-up page has position inherently. Readers invariably hold the newspaper responsible for statements and errors in the classified columns, but they hold the advertiser accountable for state- ments in the display advertising. An- other noteworthy aspect of classified ad- vertising is that a flimsy shoddy news- paper seldom gets far as a classified medium."

Answering President Carroll's question as to the ideal makeup of a classified page, Harvey Gwaltney, of the Milwau- kee Journal said:

"If I had four columns of classified advertising I should not accept any dis- play copy for those columns; if I had many pages of classified, I would admit almost any display. A few display ad- vertisements in a small classified section creates no interest among readers before whom you must place a wide selection in your want ads. On the other hand a great many display advertisements can be in- cluded in a large classified section with- out detracting from the reader interest. The ideal make-up is solid agate, but I am willing to sacrifice a pure ideal for sound methods of gaining new revenue.

"I should restrict the use of type larg- er than 10 point to advertisments larger than one inch. If a six line advertiser uses 18 point display type on a 20 point slug he is left with only two lines for his sales message and I am sure that he could use the other four lines with 30 words to greater advantage than the two words he can set in display facts. I would not break column rules. I would not permit the use of borders. I would discourage iregular set ups. All are unnecessary and harmful in classified columns."

C. L. Perkins, Chicago Herald-Ex- aminer, declared that circulation had no bearing on classified rates, although it was of great importance with reference to display rates. The thing that counts in classified advertising, he said, is the number of people who have learned to look for and read classified advertising in a given newspaper. Display rates on a newspaper which had prestige as a clas- sified medium might well be lower than those charged for want ads.

P. M. Hughes, Minneapolis Tribune, described his methods of obtaining classi- fied contracts from jobbers, painters, landscape gardeners, plumbers, etc., lo- cated out of the business section. Three men are kept at this solicitation, he said, and a special girl in the office checked the advertising and telephoned the ad- vertisers several times a week often ob- taining extra space on certain days. The cost of the original business was 8 per cent of the revenue, he said, the extra space obtained by telephone solicitation not being credited to this division. Re- sults were satisfactory for the advertis- ers as a result, he declared, and the con- tracts were usually renewed for a longer period after the first month, the adver- tiser being allowed a rebate of half cent a line on space already used. The busi- ness is not expensive to handle, he said, advertisers often letting the same copy run for several days. Suggestions as to changes of copy were frequently made by the office

C. C. Armstrong, Cleveland Press, de- clared that newspapers in large centres cannot profitably serve small merchants in outlying suburbs reached by only a small proportion of the newspaper's great circulation on which its advertising rate is based. The Press, however, has built up a considerable volume of advertising from professional and trades people, lo- cated out of the business section but nevertheless drawing trade from all parts of the city, Mr. Armstrong said. Among those he cited a "Radio Ex- change" which he believes will run a column daily when interest revives in radio next fall.

Official sessions of the Newspaper Ex- ecutives started Tuesday afternoon, with Mr. Foster again playing a star role. At his suggestion the convention was ad- dressed by George Cohen, president of Foley Brothers' Dry Goods Company, Houston, who declared that women read- ers of newspapers consider department store advertisements the most important item of news in the paper, yet the de- partment store pays for the privilege of inserting this news copy.

Department stores, which are alert to progress, not only are firm believers in the power of advertising, but they are eager to use more advertising, so long as it demonstrates its benefits both to customer and store. He suggested: "Only by a competent analysis and study of department store ills can more and better advertising become a factor in pro- ducing a cure, only then will the news- paper truly serve and become a torch- bearer both to the department store and the public. Department stores make or lose money according to the law of av- erages and any help that you can render, in effecting a reduction of the number of sick cats (backward departments) is helpful service.

"I recently made a trip of five days through the South, stopping at Dallas, Memphis, Atlanta and New Orleans, vis- iting department store friends, who feel free to compare their confidential figures with me. In one of these cities there is a store, let us call it John Blank's, which in a certain department designated as Department No. 1, does a business of less than $100,000 a year, and the same department in my store does a business in excess of $200,000. At the same time, in the Blank store, under the same man who runs No. 1, there is De- partment No. 2 which did last year a business of $165,000, whereas this same department in my store did a business of less than $70,000.

"Now don't expect me to tell you that lack of advertising had anything to do with the condition in either my friend Blank's store or in my own; but a great many things had to do with this which I was able to sense, and when I returned home I planned to relocate my depart- ment. I planned, with my merchandise man, to enlarge upon the scope of its merchandise, I planned to put in a dif- ferent style of fixture, then, and then only, did I plan with my sales manager to increase this department's advertising space in order to tell the public what we were doing.

"And my friend Blank is not going to change his fixtures; he is not going to relocate his department; but he is going to put in an assistant to the merchan- dise man of that "sick" department, in order to give it certain attention which I told him I found it profitable to give mine. He is planning to sell these goods on a different basis of profit; he con- templates making some change in his vo- cational training work for the employes of that department. Then, and then only he will use the space of the news- paper more largely for that department, because he also wants his public to know of all the improvements he is making.

"Another much-debated point. Some time ago there was a discussion in the local advertising club, brought about by the statement of a printer, that the ul- timate consumer paid for advertising. A newspaper advertiser, I think it was a department store, attempted to prove that the advertising was not paid for by the consumer because by the use of adver- tising, volume was increased, overhead was decreased and there was an attend- ant lower cost of doing business. An elderly gentleman was present; a man who has been in the retail business in this state for over fifty years. He claims to be the first man in Texas to use display advertising for a department store. He happens to be my father. He said that the people who pay for adver- tising are the merchants who have ad- vertised and who have stopped."

Mr. Foster again took the floor at the Chair's invitation and described the Chronicle's fight against public utilities which were indifferent to the public wel- fare. He won, but "Take no credit for it, for beating public utilities with a good newspaper is like taking candy from a baby," he said.

After the defeat, the street-car cor- poration head visited the Chronicle's edi- tor, admitted his fault, promised to amend his ways, asked the Chronicle's support and received it upon fulfillment of con- ditions for better service to the people laid down by Foster.

The company's reformation has been genuine and permanent, Mr. Foster stated, and instead of antagonizing the public, the street car and other utility companies make every effort through newspaper advertising and through cour- teous treatment of the public by employes to preserve the good feeling that now exists.

Direct testimony was then given by W. E. Wood, president of the Houston Street Railway Company and S. R. Ber- tron, president of the Houston Light and Power Company, as to the accuracy of Foster's statements and as to the meth- ods they now pursue of winning and hold- ing public esteem. Both are liberal users of newspaper space.

The average local dealer needs adver- tising ideas, was the substance of the ad- dress made by Thomas K. Kelly, of the T. K. Kelly Sales System, before the Association of Newspaper Advertising Executives May 12.

"These average dealers," he said, "are the men whom newspaper advertising can bring from a comparatively small business man to the top rungs of his line, and to whom the newspapers must look for the future developments of a greater market for newspaper advertising.

"Visualize their position and their problems and develop your service to meet them, and I am sure your reward will be quick in coming, a reward that will consist of a new permanent advertisers constantly using more and more space."

"Before the advertising agency existed the newspaper was a great institution," James O'Shaughnessy, secretary of the A. A. A. A. said in opening his address, on "The Relation Between Advertising Agencies and Newspapers."

"As great as newspapers are, the advertising agency is related by the tie of nativity. We were born in the old homestead, and we never moved away.

"Since we began newspapers have grown in number, in circulations, in financial operations and in advertising lineage. Today there are more than 2,000 daily newspapers, which might be called survivors, as the fittest.

"These newspapers have a total circulation well upward of 31,000,000 copies daily, as shown by audited figures. Enough copies of newspapers are printed every day to supply one to every home in the 48 states, with enough left over to supply every home in all the rest of North America, and with 2,000,000 copies to spare.

"The newspaper habit is ingrained in American life. The American newspaper is a complete response to the reading habits or requirements of the family."

Turning to consideration of the 15 per cent commission paid to agencies by newspapers, Mr. O'Shaughnessy described it as "This old family relation, with its traditional arrangement."

"We find the prospective thing, and cultivate it into reality. We bring it all to you. You hand us back 15 per cent. We return to the prospect, which we have developed into an account, and we spend about 12 per cent of the 15 per cent keeping it looking like an account in your columns. Then we find more prospects and repeat the process.

"Sometimes we have been asked why we continue to maintain this old family relation with its traditional arrangement.

"The answer is as simple as the arrangement itself. It is the only answer that we can find. It may be plainly stated in the following words:

"It is the best arrangement because it is logical in business; sound and just. The practice of years proves it is the best for everybody concerned.

"The future for advertising is as fair as we could ask. Your circulations are honest and are known to be honest. Your rates are sound. The results of advertising prove it."

How far may and can newspaper publishers go in obtaining facts relative to the distribution and marketing of commodities in their respective areas was discussed May 13 by Dr. Daniel Starch, director of the Department of Research of the American Association of Advertising Agencies.

Dr. Starch described methods being employed by his department in a survey at present being conducted on magazine circulation, and said a similar survey would probably be later conducted to establish facts regarding the buying power of newspaper readers.

Remarking that people were often afraid of research because they were afraid of truth, he closed his address with the quotation "there is nothing so powerful as the truth and nothing so strange."

"An analysis of the buying power of the readers of a given newspaper," he said, "could probably be made by first, taking the delivery routes of a given newspaper and determining the occupations and buying power of the various readers; secondly, by making a survey of news stands of the people who buy their newspapers at the stands; third, by making a house-to-house canvass by means of personal interviews through a questionnaire; and fourth, by means of a mailed questionnaire.

"I take it that the immediate problem before you as newspaper executives is: How can you build up facts that shall be useful in the marketing of goods in your respective communities?", he declared.

"In other words, speaking more broadly, how can you eliminate waste and lost motion and make your efforts more effective in the distribution of goods.

"I am confident that careful study, analysis and research will help us in eliminating these wastes and in making our efforts more fruitful."

For a more complete and correct picture of the market in a given area than is now possible, he said, reliable answers to the following questions were necessary:

1. Who has the purchasing power within the area covered by a given newspaper to buy a given product?

2. How many of this buying power are there within this given area and how many of them may buy or need this product now or in the future?

3. Where geographically within this area do they live?

4. To what extent does a given newspaper reach the people within its area; that is how many people of each degree of buying power does a given paper reach and what standing does a given newspaper have in the minds of the persons in each class of buying power?

There is an increasing demand for "space" on radio broadcasting programs, George M. Burbach, St. Louis Post Dispatch, told the newspaper men. Amazing revenues have already been obtained on contracts, he said, the aggressive American Telephone & Telegraph Company having produced between five hundred thousand and a million dollars. Mr. Burbach said a newspaper station with a fairly good range might obtain as much as $200 an hour from local or national advertisers. The Post Dispatch, operating KSD, is pioneering in this field and Mr. Burbach offered to give other newspapers which wish it, the benefit of his experience.

W. E. Donahue, local advertising manager, Chicago Tribune, laid all cards face up in telling how the Tribune has built $400,000 of candy advertising.

Established candy firms scorned advertising idea in 1921, he said. Prohibition had increased demand for sweets and Fanny May Store started, under conduct of a former Washington correspondent named Archibald. Archibald, induced to visit Tribune by careful planning, asked Donahue whether chain store business could succeed advertising seventy cent candy. Donahue admitted having no precedent but replied affirmatively.

"Send a salesman to call on Chicago people daily. Your business runs every day. Expense and income are daily matters. Tribune advertising should work daily."

Donahue suggested first year appropriation, $50,000, copy five days a week, 155 lines two column space. The Tribune would determine the course of the first ten weeks advertising and prepare all copy.

Starting the campaign in April, business was checked June 25 and found satisfactory.

Donahue proposed summer campaign to reduce drop from winter business from 40 to 33 per cent. August reports showed summer business to have passed previous December on expenditure of $12,000.

Fanny May Stores now number 27 in Chicago. Other firms have done likewise and Tribune local candy advertising passed $400,000 in 1924.

Final session addresses were made by R. A. Turnquist, Milwaukee Journal; Carmical, Chicago, and W. G. Woodward, Gravure Service.

Newspaper advertising departments for many years have been troubled by a technical distinction between local advertising which is charged at "local rate," and "general" advertising, which calls for another rate, except in cases of publications which charge a uniform flat rate, or "one price" for space. Varying interpretations have aroused controversy, but sometime ago the Milwaukee Journal outlined a code of standards, calculated to answer the problem in its own field, declared Mr. Turnquist.

Considering all purposes for which display advertising might be scheduled in the Journal, the paper classifies as "local" only that copy ordered by "firms doing a retail to consumer business exclusively through their own retail outlet in Milwaukee." This interpretation is based on a consideration of "two classes of display advertising," Mr. Turnquist explained, "that which intends to stimulate local sales for an individual merchant, and that advertising which is published to create and perpetuate general selling of an article of service in our territory of circulation, through a diversity of retail selling outlets or selling agencies."

TEXAS "ROUND-UP"

ALL of the seventeen railroads that meet the sea at Houston have their hands and their tracks full of delegates in trainload lots. More than half of the delegations arrived Saturday afternoon, among them President Holland on the "President's Special" from Kansas City, the St. Petersburg delegation in a palm-garnished entourage, and the New York-New England—Old England-Philadelphia representatives, who disembarked Saturday evening from a 13-car special.

HOUSTON'S welcome is hearty. Greeters wearing identification cards as big as pie-plates boarded the incoming trains 100 miles away and relieved the visitors of all the worries of arrival.

ALL of the main streets are swept and garnished. Flags of all nations wave in the brisk breezes for block after block. White suits, gaily-banded straw hats, red badges, blue badges, white badges swing up and down Main and Texas, around the Rice Hotel where several of the big delegations are quartered. Soldiers of the Regular army, white-clad Texas cavalrymen, members of the Mexican delegation's military escort in the red and blue of the Southern Republic, and groups of two or three of St. Petersburg's famous Scottish band in plaids, tartans, and sporrans make the Sunday morning effect kaleidoscopic.

AND by far the most brilliant of a glittering array of decorations is the building of the Houston Chronicle. Publisher Marcellus E. Foster has had the Main and Travis sides of the building scrubbed so the green and white enameled brick stands out among the city's skyscrapers like a Taj Mahal. By night two great batteries of flood-lights play on the shining walls and on the flags of the nation and Texas whipping in the breeze far above the street.

THE Post-Dispatch contents itself with the painted announcement that the skeleton of steel rising from a great pit two or three blocks down Texas avenue is the beginning of its new 22-story building. The press flashes its electric sign a square or two away in welcome.

"MEFO" as Houstonians speak of M. E. Foster, aforementioned publisher of the Chronicle, met Governor Miriam A. Ferguson as she stepped from her special car Saturday. He also escorted her to a seat in his loge after her address of welcome to the delegates at the Saturday night reception in the magnificent City Auditorium.

HER Excellency, the Governor of Texas, doesn't want her public office to ruin the efficiency of her hands for the embroidery and other light extra-official manual duties. Some hundred or so club officials were on line for the official reception by the Governor, Mary Holcombe, President Patton of the Houston Advertising Club, and President Lou E. Holland, and all were informed by former Governor Ferguson who stood beside his distinguished wife, that she preferred not to shake hands. Every one of the dozen ladies on line, however, received a gentle handclasp and a cordial word of greeting from the Chief Executive.

FIVE thousand Mexicans of Houston turned out to welcome the Mexican National Band, sent to the convention by President Calles. It is the centre of the Pan-American delegation, which is composed principally of consular officers stationed in Southern cities. The band, whose official title is the First Garrison Band of Mexico City, is 72 pieces strong. No bandmaster struts ahead flashing a baton in the sun to delight the kids. None is needed for a Mexican band, they tell you in Houston, and one can believe it after listening to an hour's music—which the Chronicle's reporter reverently spells with a Capital M. Capt. Genaro Nunez with saber bared marches in the considerable dignity of his 26 years at the head of the company.

AND speaking of music we skipped away from convention fellowship to the Chronicle office to write this and a few other pieces in the quiet of a newspaper shop. (Time out) A jazz band wearing yellow brassards of Dallas on their red-frogged blue coats, invaded their peaceful precincts with a troop of horns, trombones, bassdrums and saxophones. All work suspended for five minutes.

ST. LOUIS greeted the New York and associated delegations in royal fashion Friday afternoon. During the three-hour wait of the train at Union Station, the delegations were escorted around the city in automobiles, finishing at the Hotel Coronado, where a light supper was served. Addresses were made by Sir William Veno, C. K. Woodbridge Rowe-Stewart, Herbert S. Houston and others, responding to introductions by President Place of the St. Louis Ad Club.

NEWS of the minute was served the New Yorkers as they progressed through Ohio and Indiana by the Scripps-Howard Newspapers of Columbus, Cincinnati and Indianapolis. Copies, respectively, of the Citizen, Post, and Times, were distributed throughout the train as short stops were made. A four-page sheet of news briefs were also distributed at various stops by the United Press.

NO three ringed circus was ever like this. Twenty-six conventions all at once. Newspapers have the biggest or best attended meetings. Some 150 executives present.

ONE or two departmental sessions are apparently in the fourth dimension, nobody can find them. Houstonians don't deny that it is hot, 85 in the shade at noon but they always allude to the cool nights. Midnight breezes at the Rice Hotel recall 1923 at Atlantic City. Circle tours to New Orleans, Mexico and San Antonio, start Thursday night. The North Texas tour was cancelled. Houston's newspaper folks, men and women, haven't slept since May 9. They did a fine job with the convention.

PLAN TO STUDY POSTAL RATE PROBLEM AND RECOMMEND LEGISLATION

National Advertising Commission Re-elects W. Frank McClure as Chairman—George M. Burbach and C. M. Hatfield Officers

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

HOUSTON, TEX., May 13.—The National Advertising Commission again elected W. Frank McClure, Chicago, chairman, which means also that he will be a member of the executive committee. Other officers of the national commission elected were: George M. Burbach, St. Louis Post Dispatch, vice-chairman, and Charles F. Hatfield, St. Louis, secretary.

W. FRANK MCCLURE

Sustaining members elected: Edwin T. Meredith, of Des Moines, and when a new president is elected, Lou E. Holland, will become a member of the executive committee, as the retiring president, succeeding Charles Henry Mackintosh, Chicago.

E. Allen Frost, Chicago, was appointed chairman of a committee of the National Advertising Commission, to confer with the executive committee of the association concerning the feasibility of the appointment of a body representing the various interests in advertising, to study the postal rate problem and make recommendations to Congress. Other members of the committee were: Harry Tipper, New York; Theodore R. Grelach, Joliet; Geo. Burbach, St. Louis, and Homer J. Buckley, Chicago.

This action was taken following an address by Mr. Buckley, who has been one of the leaders in the fight which the Direct Mail Association has made against the present postal rate law. He referred to the fact that the national commission had some time ago asked the executive committee to authorize the president to appoint a commission on postal rules, but that the committee "had chosen to discard the suggestion, from which action I dissent, and I want to go on record here as favoring a joint meeting of all interests in advertising." He said that unless the national commission took a firm stand on this matter, he was afraid it would disintegrate, and called the action of the Associated Advertising Clubs a "slap in the face" of the action taken by the executive committee.

GEORGE U. BURBACH

Mr. Tipper said he, too, had a feeling of resentment, but not against President Holland and the executive committee of the Associated Advertising Clubs, but against the fact that the national commission had proposed such a move in the first place without having the members of the commission first take the matter up with their respective bodies, to ascertain whether such a move was desired. He doubted that all of those who voted for the original plan were authorized to speak for their respective bodies, and he said it was his personal opinion that the commission authorized by the last Congress, representing Congress, was in a better position to make such an investigation.

Jesse H. Neal, of New York, agreed with Mr. Tipper that no action should be taken by members of the national commission until they had consulted the bodies that appointed them, for if they did, they might be repudiated by their organizations.

Judge Frost poured oil on the waters by suggesting that W. Frank McClure, chairman of the national commission, appoint a committee, of which he was appointed chairman.

"Let's Eliminate Waste in Direct Mail Advertising," was the subject of an address by Homer J. Buckley, president, Buckley Dement & Co., Chicago, Ill., before the Associated Clubs, May 12.

"Of all the places in advertising where the mass selling appeal should be limited, it is in direct mail advertising," he said.

"I don't mean by this that the mass selling appeal should not be used at all in direct mail selling, but I do want to emphasize that its use should be restricted.

"In nine cases out of ten, mass selling appeals have no place in a campaign of direct mail advertising, and if I were to analyze the failures reported I would invariably attribute the reason to this 'bogey' which I have chosen to call mass appeal of copy preparation and circularizing.

"It's the lazy man's way—and more often the inexperienced practitioner's method—of conducting a direct mail campaign.

"The specific requirements in the preparation of successful direct mail advertising are training and experience, combined with thorough understanding of "1: The products—its merchandising angles and competition.

"2: The lists to be covered and the most effective method of classifying them according to buying habits, etc.

"3: The ability to produce the type of copy appeal of direct and specific interest rebated to each group at the point of purchase.

"4: The mechanics of direct mail pieces and their specific application to each class.

"5: The follow-up—when, where and how employed.

CLASSIFIED MANAGERS ELECT C. W. NAX PRESIDENT AT HOUSTON MEET

St. Louis Globe-Democrat Man Succeeds J. L. Irvin of Des Moines Register—Charles C. Hardin Named First Vice President

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

HOUSTON, Tex., May 13.—Chas W. Nax, classified advertising manager of the St. Louis Globe Democrat was elected president of the Association of Newspapers Classified Advertising Managers at its sixth annual convention held in Houston May 10 to 14, in conjunction with the A. A. C. W. annual meet.

The other officers elected were Charles C. Hardin, of the Columbus Dispatch, first vice-president; J. H. Butler, Houston Chronicle, second vice-president; C. C. Armstrong, Cleveland Press, treasurer; and H. A. Dryden, Peoria Journal-Transcript, secretary.

O. W. Wespe, of the Louisville Courier-Journal, Carl Nissen of the Los Angeles Herald and H. J. Moehlman, of the Baltimore Sun, were elected directors taking the places of R. E. Seiler of the Los Angeles Examiner, P. M. Hough, of the Minneapolis Tribune, and H. C. McDonald of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, whose two terms of office expired.

The directors whose terms of office continue for another year are Fred Tate of the Toronto Star, H. G. Barringer of the Indianapolis News and C. L. Perkins of the Chicago Herald and Examiner.

J. L. Irvin of the Des Moines Register and Tribune-News, retiring president, automatically becomes a member of the board of directors.

Compared with previous conventions this one proves more than the others the value of the work being done by the Association for the cause of classified advertising. Greater enthusiasm in the work, a better appreciation of the underlying principles of classified advertising and a fuller realization of its value to newspapers and their readers by the publishers and classified managers were apparent at every session.

While this was not the largest convention in point of numbers, every section of the country was represented, while four delegates registered from Canada.

President Irvin, called the first session to order promptly at 10 a. m., Monday morning, and after the delegates had registered, convention committees been appointed and reports of officers read the long program was started.

In his opening address President Irvin pointed out the accomplishments of the Association during its life. Chief among them was the educational work in furthering the cause of Truth in Advertising.

Harry Gevoltney of the Milwaukee Journal and head of the program committee, presided over the discussions. The first session brought out a subject that had never been brought before any other meetings of the association—how to analyze a classified section to determine its selling features. It was proven conclusively that many classifications which were established could be used to sell business in other classifications. The best methods of using facts regarding quantity and quality of circulation were also thoroughly discussed at this meeting.

The afternoon session Monday was devoted to ways and means of selling potential advertisers in the many lines of business which have never used classified advertising. This will undoubtedly prove one of the most profitable meetings as it opened up many new fields of space buyers and methods of selling them.

This being a "selling" convention the time devoted to contracts was used in methods of getting the name on the dotted line.

Tuesday morning a joint session was held with the A. N. A. E. as reported elsewhere in this issue of EDITOR & PUBLISHER. The afternoon session was a discussion on ways and means to prevent the dishonest advertisers from using the classified columns of newspapers. Many cases of readers being refrauded were presented and the importance of creating reader confidence was emphasized. It was the sense of the organization that still greater effort should be made to make the agencies placing classified to be more careful of the character of the business forwarded and to make the newspapers stricter in their rules of censorship.

Wednesday was the election of officers and two-minute talks by each delegate on the most useful discovery or accomplishment of the past year.

At noon Tuesday, the delegates were divided into three groups. Those from evening, morning and combination papers. At these luncheons the problems peculiar to these groups were discussed.

Tuesday afternoon, separate meetings were held by delegates from large newspapers and from small publications.

Thursday was devoted to ways of saving money in departmental administration, typographical arrangement and sales plans.

C. L. Perkins, was appointed editor of The Classified Journal. The organization monthly publication, and plans were made for its enlargement.

At a meeting of the directors held Thursday, it was decided to hold the next convention in Philadelphia at the time of the A. A. C. W. meeting. The association also voted to seek membership in the National Commission of that organization.

LABERT ST. CLAIR TELLS OF SOME FOLKS WHO SHOULD BE IN JAIL

Remarks on better advertising copy and practices by Labert St. Clair, director of advertising, American Electric Railway Association, before Associated Advertising Clubs of the World Convention, Houston, Tex., May 12.

BETTER copy will be written in the United States only when we have stricter laws controlling the writing of it and judges who will enforce these laws impartially.

The following acts should be made illegal and penalties imposed as indicated:

For trying to convince anyone that advertising is anything except common sense salesmanship on paper—life.

For writing on a subject which we do not fully understand and have been too lazy to investigate fully—twenty years.

For "yessing" the boss and putting out a piece of copy which we know is poor—nineteen years and eleven months.

For writing a piece of public utility copy which even Oswald, the square-head who washes plates at the roadhouse, cannot understand—eighteen years.

For using the words "mass psychology," or "reaction" either publicly or privately—life minus one day.

For running the pictures of any of the bosses' children or infant near-relatives on any piece of printed matter—fourteen years.

For trying to create symphathy for any company, incorporating a whine in any piece of copy or trying to sell service by any means except on its merits—the dungeon.

For contributing one cent to any special edition or "puff" proposition—twelve years.

For issuing copy for the news columns which will not pass on its merits as news matter—eleven years.

For trying to convince anyone that his mimeographed letter with the name filled in is a personal communication—ten years at hard labor. Preferably that of reading the letter again and again.

For writing flowing sentences, sprinkled with semi-colons, but concealing from the reader what we are talking about—the rock pile.

For writing about and picturing our plant machinery to the entire exclusion of our human machinery—the pillory.

For writing flat, verbless, tomato-can-label headlines—the straight jacket.

While all of us are in jail, we might ably spend our time trying to boil down the Book of Proverbs and Grey's Elegy. Upon emerging, we will have a much better appreciation of the value of space.

Daily Adds Radio Station

The Madison (Wis.) Capital Times recently opened a private radio station call number WIBA, broadcasting on a 236 meter length. The station was officially dedicated May 8 with talks by Governor J. J. Blaine of Wisconsin, Mayor Kittleson of Madison, Philip La Follette, district attorney of Dane County, and F. G. Oetking, representing the Madison Association of Commerce. Programs are broadcast three times a week and consist of orchestra music and individual selections.

Anaheim Plain Dealer Sold

The Anaheim (Cal.) Orange County Plain Dealer, one of the oldest dailies in Orange county, established 27 years ago, was purchased this week by John S. Baker and his son, Lotus H. Loudon, the latter the publisher of the Anaheim Bulletin, afternoon paper. The cash consideration was set at $35,000. The Bulletin will retain its entire personnel, but none of the Plain Dealer employees.

DINNER IN HONOR OF LOU E. HOLLAND

Governor "Ma" Ferguson Also Addresses Convention Women at University Club—International Representatives Speak

(By Telegraph to Editor & Publisher)

Houston, Tex., May 12.—Advertising men representing nine nations joined in a dinner last night to president Lou E. Holland and other officers of The Associated Advertising Clubs, preliminary to convention activities, while the men were celebrating at the Houston Club, the ladies were entertained at a similar function at the University Club, where Gov. "Ma" Ferguson and Judge Hortense Ward of Houston, were guests of honor.

Lou Holland

Speakers who repsonded to Toastmaster Bob Cornell's numerous invitations were: For Great Britain: Sir William Veno, who compared Houston with his Manchester home, as inland ports, called Manchester Houston's best customer and advised the local citizenry that their famed port would soon be inadequate for the business it would have to handle; for Peru: Dr. Victor Andores Belaunde, a member of the Rice Institute Faculty, an authority on South American affairs; for Brazil: Consul General J. A. Muniz; for Mexico: Arturo M. Elias, special representative of President Calles; for Cuba: Samuel Tolon, of the Cuban Department of Commerce; for Australia: Norman S. H. Catts, Sydney Advertising Agent; for Switzerland: Henry George, Geneva Advertising Agent; for San Salvador: Luis Felipe, newspaper editor.

John H. Payne, business manager of The Houston Press, George B. Forrestall, George S. Cohen, M. E. Foster and R. L. Dudley, of the Houston Executive Committee also made short talks.

Mr. Payne made a plea for "Universal Understanding," recounting the adoption and signing of the Peace Resolution in London, last year, by the A. A. C. W. and arguing that the work be carried on at this convention.

Rowe Stewart, Philadelphia Record, spoke for Philadelphia and W. L. "Pop" Freeman, for St. Petersburg, Fla., bidding for the 1926 convention.

Dr. Charles Aubrey Eaton, Congressman from New Jersey, offered the invocation. Mayor Oscar Holcombe, presiding, introduced R. H. Cornell as toastmaster. H. M. Garwood made the address of welcome. Toasts were drunk for President Coolidge and King George. Judge Chester H. Bryan, Herbert S. Houston, of New York, a past president of the association, and former Governor James E. Ferguson also spoke.

President Holland was given an engraved and mounted copy of the Peace Resolution signed at London, by the Houston Advertising Association and a fine desk set by the Scranton Advertising Club.

J. W. Neal, chairman of the Houston Finance Committee, was given honorary membership in the Houston Advertising Association.

At the University Club Gov. "Ma" Ferguson spoke to the ladies, in part, as follows:

"Ladies of the Advertising Clubs of the World: The oportunity to address another group of the women who are carving new marks in the paths where only men have walked gives me sincere pleasure. I bid you welcome to Texas.

"I know something of the struggles you have had and something of the obstacles you have overcome—struggles and obstacles the more difficult of conquering since you are women. I know from my own experience, for it is no easy thing to be a woman governor, walking where men have walked alone, and sitting where men alone have sat.

"So it is as a co-worker, a fellow-pioneer, I come before you, to greet you, to congratulate you on your achievements, and to plan with you, if I may be permitted, greater things for the future.

"I believe that women may do great things for the business world. It is an old thing to talk of woman's intuition and her keen grasp on the little things of life. Yet wherever you find a successful woman, you find a woman who has taken her womanly ways along with her into her business world; a woman who has solved her problems with her heart as well as her head; a woman who has not allowed maudlin sentiment to over-balance her belief in kindliness and justice and fair play.

"This does not mean that I condone with the mannish woman. If a woman is going to be mannish, let her stay away from me. God made us women and gave us rare opportunities as women; let the men profit by their own peculiar little mannerisms. There is no excuse for the woman in business unless she is going to stay a woman there. If she is going to ape men, let her stay at home and let the men keep right on as they have been going. We made our plea to get into the business world that we might better it. If we are going to do just as the men have done, we certainly cannot do better than they have done.

"I heartily commend the woman who has the fighting heart in her, who will leave the peaceful quiet ways of her grandmothers to battle against unknown odds, and who has the courage to keep on fighting until she succeeds. I congratulate her, I honor her, and I am proud of her. I am glad I live today, rather than fifty years ago, that I may see the things we women have started. Let us build wisely and well, that the next generations may go on to finer deeds and firmer buildings."

MRS. BLACKWOOD IS RE-ELECTED PRESIDENT

Chicago Woman Again Leads Federation of Women's Ad Clubs—Praised by Holland

(By Telegraph to Editor & Publisher)

Houston, Tex., May 13.—The greatest title a woman in the business world can have is that of advertising woman, Lou Holland, retiring president of the A. A. C. of W. told members of the Eighth Federation of Women's Advertising Clubs at the annual election in Houston.

Following are the officers named by the women for the coming year:

Mrs. Bernice Blackwood, of Chicago, re-elected president; Miss Minna Hall Simmons, president of Woman's Advertising Club of New York, elected vice-president; Miss Ethel B. Scully, of Milwaukee, retained as women's representative on executive board of A. A. C. of W., and Jessie Ziesler, retained as secretary.

This session of women delegates was presided over by Mrs. Edith Axell, president of the Women's Advertising Club of Houston. Speakers included Senor A. M. Elias, special representative of Mexico, and Senator Hiram Bingham, of Connecticut, who talked about President Coolidge.

"The average women's advertising club takes itself more seriously and does its work better than the average advertising club of men," Carl Hunt, general manager of the A. A. C. W. declared in an address before the federation.

"No one who has observed the development of the advertising business would question the place of women in it, nor the place of the women's advertising clubs," he said.

"It is a common thing nowadays for a woman, after being employed in advertising for some years to strike out for herself, in her own little business, where she can get all she earns. These women usually make good, because they take their work seriously and work hard.

"The advertising woman does have a place in the business, and a position of growing importance it is, too."

Dinner to Kent Cooper

Kent Cooper, new general manager of the Associated Press, will be the guest of honor at a testimonial dinner to be given him June 4, at the Lotos Club, New York, by 20 of his intimate friends. In charge of arrangements are Melville E. Stone, Associated Press secretary, Robert H. Davis, editor of Munsey's Magazine, and Norris A. Huse, business manager of the Mount Vernon Augus and the New Rochelle Standard Star.

PROTECTION TOPIC OF FINANCIAL GROUP

"THE business of protecting the gigantic national investment in financial advertising has, in the past several years, been reduced largely to a science," Kenneth Barnard, director of the Detroit Better Business Bureau, declared, addressing the financial advertisers in session May 13.

"The greatest weapon of the Better Business Bureau in preventing fraud is the use of advertising. The same magic something that sells your goods has proved beyond any shadow of doubt to be an effective instrument to prevent fraud.

"It has been truthfully said that 'A fool and his money are soon parted.' The job of the Better Business Bureau is not to keep fools from being robbed by the unscrupulous, but to take fools out of their present category and make them into careful, discerning, thrifty investors.

"If the small investor can see the golden opportunities ahead in the careful purchase of legitimate securities from houses of proven standing and honesty, there will be ushered in through advertising, and through financial advertising, if you please, a new era of American prosperity."

Making investment advertising effective was the major theme of the address made May 13 before the financial advertisers by Henry M. Tenney, advertising manager of the First National Company, St. Louis, Mo.

"To achieve effectiveness three important problems confront us," he said. They are as follows:

"Building public confidence, through conservative, dignified methods; educational campaigns, cultivating the broad field of inexperienced investors; and adoption of more scientific ways of following up inquiries."

Pictures Radioed 5,000 Miles

Pictures, transmitted more than 5,000 miles in 20 minutes were received in New York, May 7, from Honolulu using wireless and wire, a process perfected by the Radio Corporation of America.

The pictures so received, photographs of the war games and army and navy leaders in the sham combats, were reproduced in New York newspapers.

The picture-transmitter is a portable apparatus developed by Captain R. H. Ranger, the inventor of the process which performed yesterday's feat.

SKY FIRE AND PAGEAN AT TEXAS SHRINE

Ten Thousand Dine and Witness Go geous Spectacle on Sam Houston's Texas Independence Acre—"The Truth" in Sparks

(By Telegraph to Editor & Publisher)

Houston, Tex., May 12.—Five thou and delegates to the Advertising Co vention and almost as many of the hosts were served a shore dinner las night on tables which covered the acr of ground where Sam Houston's Texa Troops ate their last meal before the attack on Santa Anna's troops, whic won independence for Texas in 1836.

More than one thousand "courtes automobiles" transported the advertisin men the 22 miles to the historic Sa Jacinto Battlefield, a State Park an shrine sacred to Texans. And, continu ing to speak in thousands, as they do i Texas, more than one thousand scho children participated in an histori pageant depicting the history of Texa under the six flags which her sons hav saluted and fought at various periods.

Delegates were shown, on the way t the battlefield, the Houston Ship Chann and Turning Basin, to which Houstonian attribute much of the prosperity an growth which is evidenced on every side Cotton compresses, oil refineries an many other factories are operating alon the Channel, their plumes of light o smoke providing new optical sensation for delegates from the murky northern cities of forge and mill.

Moving in a lengthy line, at 25 mile an hour, through patrols of Texa Cavalry, the parade of cars reached th battlefield parking spaces and debarke the advertising men in time for spee boat races in the channel. Dinner wa served as the last exhaust of the racin engines died. Served by 250 High Schoo students, the seafood and fried chicke ice cream and coffee, mints and the in evitable contribution of oranges—Florida' succulent propaganda for the next con vention—all served their purposes an adjourned for the pageant.

The history of the state was portraye in six scenes—the war dances of th Tejas Indians, the French discoverer whose dances were curtailed by the in hospitable redskins, the soldiers and mis sion friars of old Spain, the struggle be tween Mexico and Texas which brough the Lone Star Flag into being; the en trance of Texas into the American Union the emergence of the Stars and Bars dur ing the Civil War and the rise supreme over all of the Stars and Stripes at the peak of the six massed colors.

Fireworks flashed forth on the opposite bank of the channel into likenesses of Lou Holland and of The Truth emblem of the Clubs and St. Petersburg, Florida saw its bid for the 1926 meeting gleam in points of flame. The Houston Canoe Club depicted the Pageant of Nations, illuminated by Searchlights from boats in the channel and overhead rockets, flares, bombs and Roman candles.

It was a great event, said "Mefo" in Houston Chronicle's column "Our City," today, giving full credit to John H. Payne, business manager of The Press, who was in complete charge of the Barbecue and Pageant. Payne was back at his desk on the Press today, knowing what the President of the United States feels like after greeting White House visitors for several hours.

PHILADELPHIA NORTH AMERICAN SOLD

Cyrus H. K. Curtis Buys Oldest U. S. Daily—Price Said to Be $1,700,000—Will Merge It With Public Ledger Monday and Launch New Morning Tabloid

By ARTHUR JOYCE

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

DAVID E. SMILEY, executive editor of the Curtis newspapers, issued the following statement to Editor & Publisher on May 14:

"The Public Ledger Company completed the purchase of the North American today. The two newspapers will be merged and published daily and Sunday under the title Philadelphia Public Ledger & North American, beginning Monday, May 18.

"On the same day, the Public Ledger Company will begin publication of a tabloid newspaper to be called the Sun. It will be issued every weekday morning and, besides containing Associated Press dispatches, will include many features produced by the great news gathering organization by the Public Ledger.

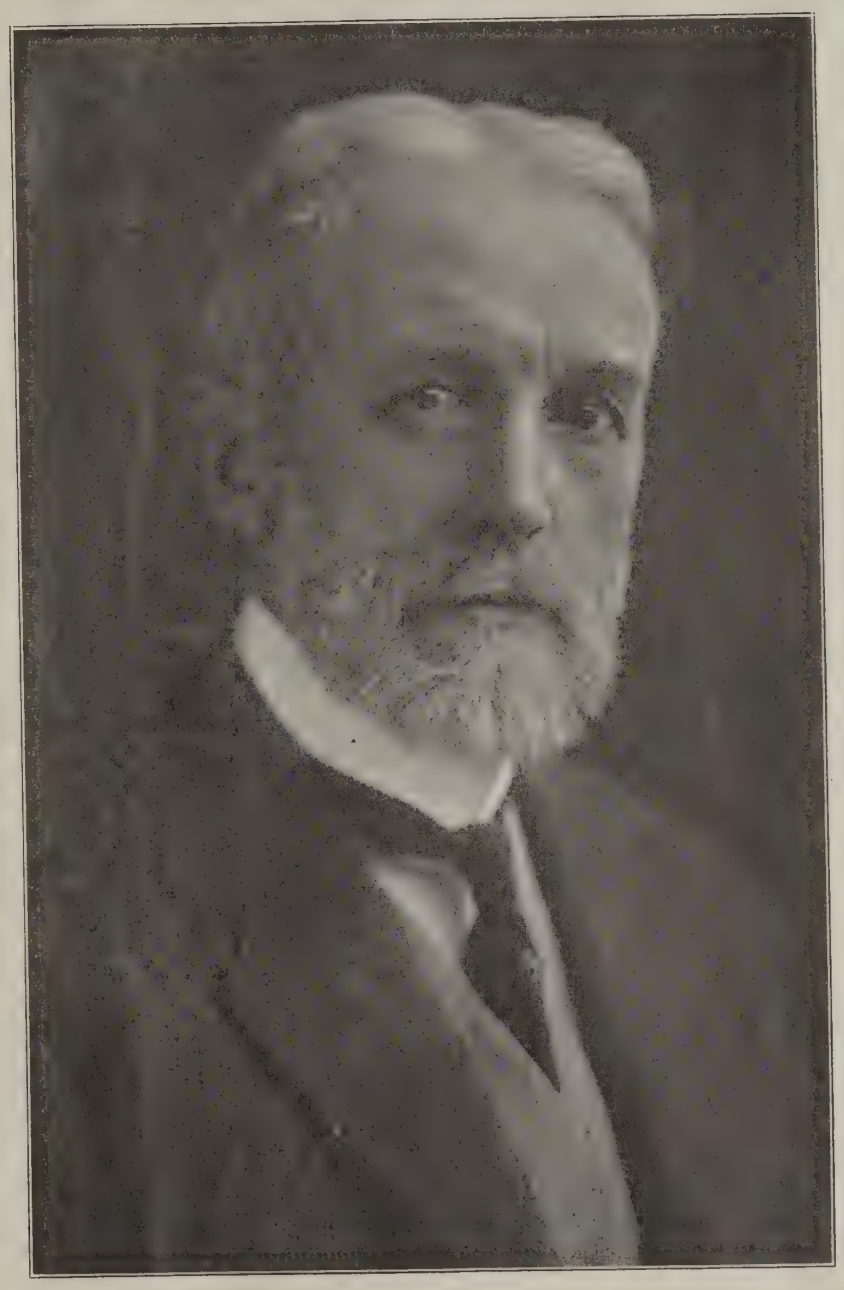
"The Sun will be profusely illustrated with news pictures and will have a broad popular appeal for all classes of readers."

PHILADELPHIA, May 14. — The North American has been sold and will cease publication with its issue of Sunday, May 17.

The purchaser is Cyrus H. K. Curtis, owner of the Public Ledger, Evening Public Ledger, New York Evening Post, Saturday Evening Post, Ladies' Home Journal and Country Gentleman.

It is understood he paid $1,700,000 for the "good-will and fixtures." This includes the Associated Press membership, but does not include the building of the North American at Broad and Sansom streets. The North American was sold by the Estate of T. B. Wanamaker, which owned the North American Company stock. The sale was engineered through John C. Bell, former attorney general of Pennsylvania, who is attorney for Mrs. Archibald Thomson, who was Mrs. Thomas B. Wanamaker, sole owner of the North American. Mr. Wanamaker died some years ago.

Associated with Mr. Bell in the sale transaction, it is understood, was E. A. Van Valkenburg, for years editor of the North American, until his retirement about five months ago.



None of the North American Company executives—not even its own attorney—knew of the pending sale until they were notified less than twenty-four hours in advance that the deal had gone through.

Everything had been going along serenely, the circulation was showing a healthy increase since the retirement of Mr. Van Valkenburg. The present management of the North American had succeeded in paying off approximately $150,000 of a debt of $250,000 that had stared it in the face five months ago.

The sale was put through at the insistence of Mrs. Thomson, who, it is understood, explained that she wanted the money for realty investments she and her sons have in mind. She owns a one-third interest in the North American, the sons own one-third and Rodman Wanamaker and his sister own the other third.

It is understood that Mrs. Thomson approached the Rodman Wanamaker interests with the proposition to buy out her interest and the interest of her sons in the publication, but that the Rodman Wanamakers declined the offer. Then Mrs. Thomson insisted upon an immediate sale.

The publication went to the Curtis interests because it was Mr. Curtis who on several previous occasions had made offers for the North American. With the franchise thus obtained, Mr. Curtis now owns, in addition to the Public Ledger and Evening Public Ledger, A. P. memberships, the old memberships previously held by the Philadelphia Times, the Philadelphia Press — two former morning newspapers—and the Evening Telegraph, owned for years by the Wanamaker interests.

CYRUS H. K. CURTIS

No official announcement has come from the Curtis interests, other than the bare statement that publication of the North American will cease next Sunday. There was a conference here today at which the final details were arranged and officially and legally the North American passed into the hands of Mr. Curtis.

Every person employed in every department of the North American has been told that after Saturday of this week they will be out of jobs. There has been a rush of editorial workers to other newspapers, but the field is limited in Philadelphia, the only other morning newspapers now being the Philadelphia Record, the Inquirer and Public Ledger. In the afternoon field is the Evening Bulletin, Evening Public Ledger, and the newly organized Daily News, a tabloid.

Officers of the North American Company, which operates the newspaper, are: Hugh B. Sutherland, vice-president, who also is chief editorial writer and who has been such for many years; James P. Considine, secretary; Jenks B. Robinson, treasurer. Frederick F. Forbes is directing editor. The managing editor is Miss Janet Stewart, one of few women in America holding a managing editor's job. The city editor is Charles N. Christman.

As the oldest daily newspaper on this continent, the North American possesses whatever merit there may be in a long and illustrious descent. But the singular prominence it has attained as a journal of recognized worth and influence has been due to new ideas and not at all to venerable connections. Its friends and enemies —it has made a great many of both—differ radically upon the justice and wisdom of its attitude upon certain vital questions, but they agree in conceding to it sincerity, courage and integrity in advocating those policies which it has adopted as its own.

There is, however, a sentimental interest in genealogy, and the North American is by no means insensible of the honor of being linked to the great past. A connection which carries it back to Benjamin Franklin, earliest and most noted of Pennsylvania journalists, and a direct descent from the first daily newspaper of the country, which was founded to fight and destined to suffer with the "insurgents" of the war of independence—these things make more interesting the vigor with which the North American battles today for the causes which it believes to be right.

Franklin left a strong impress upon American journalism, and friends of the North American like to trace his spirit in its forthright vigor of attack upon public abuses and its advocacy of constructive measures looking to better living and higher ideals. The great statesman, philosopher and newspaper man made his first publishing venture with the Universal Instructor in All the Arts and Sciences and Pennsylvania Gazette started n 1728 by Samuel Keimer. A few months proved Keimer's unfitness, but the paper developed rapidly after Franklin took it over. His first act, of course, was to cut down the preposterous title and as the Pennsylvania Gazette the journal had a prosperous career until 1821, when it became the Saturday Evening Post, forerunner of the noted magazine of today.

Franklin was editor of the Gazette until 1765. One of the earliest and most capable editors of the Post was Morton McMichael, who in 1847 took charge of the North American, and thus carried into this journal the traditions and principles of Franklin's historic success. But there are two other lines of descent which carry the North American back to the beginning of American journalism. The Pennsylvania Packet or General Advertiser, founded in 1771 by John Dunlap, and the Gazette of the United States, established in 1789, are both direct ancestors of the present paper. The Packet moved its plant to Lancaster in 1777-8, while Philadelphia was occupied by the British, but returned with the restoration of peace, having maintained a gallant advocacy throughout the cause of Independence. On September 21, 1784, it appeared as a daily newspaper, the first in America, and was conducted successfully until it was merged in 1839 with the North American.

The Gazette of the United States, dating from 1789 became a daily in 1793, and had an uninterrupted career until the North American absorbed it in 1847. Meanwhile the Gazette in 1818 had consolidated with the True American, which was the lineal descendant of William Bradford's Pennsylvania Journal, established in 1742. So that the present North American represents by direct descent newspapers founded in 1742, 1771, and 1789, and in its line a daily newspaper has been published without interruption from the pioneer daily issued in 1784.

Under the long management of Morton McMichael and his son and successor, the North American had an honorable career as a respectable, conservative journal, devoted chiefly to the advancement of commercial and manufacturing interests. While still highly regarded, it had lost, however, a good deal of its prestige when, early in 1899, it was purchased by Thomas B. Wanamaker, son of John Wanamaker, former Postmaster General, and placed under the management of E. A. Van Valkenburg, now editor and president. During the twelve years the North American's growth has been one of the phenomens of the newspaper world, and it is today, perhaps, the nearest approach to a "national daily newspaper" which the country has. It was May 15, 1899, that the paper set forth its principles, adherence to which has cost it many bitter fights, but has brought it material success as well as the highest reputation for public service. The "salutatory" thus describes the papers spirit and aims:

"The North American will exemplify the capacity and potency of truth telling journalism. It will have no covert or personal purposes or interests. It will be subservient to no man's ambition, to no creeds bias, to no class prejudice, to no party's domination.

"In politics, while maintaining its traditional Republicanism, it will nevertheless support honest candidates against dishonest ones, pure causes against corrupt ones, and the people against the bosses, regardless of party name or party effect. Above all it will stand for the rights of the many against the power and aggression of the priviliged few. Democratic civilization in the largest sense and the promotion of equality and social equity will be its mission and its hope."

There may not be anything very startling in this enunciation of principles, but the interesting fact is that for twelve years the North American has lived up to its creed, despite the stress of business competition, and the reprisals of powerful interests which the policy has offended.

There is no doubt that today at the present time the paper has more enemies than any other journal in the country, but on the other hand it has more staunch friends and supporters, and none of its critics ever challenges openly its integrity. Its course has involved unending warfare, for it is notorious that the fighting of abuses and the inauguration of constructive refroms create enmities among interests of great power.

The management declares that an advertising revenue of $100,000 a year is diverted from the paper by adherence to principle—some of it because of offense given to various "interests," some because the North American's editorial policy governs its business department and dictates the exclusion from the advertising columns of vast quantities of crooked and merely doubtful announcements which find ready admission to other publications.

The experiment inaugurated twelve years ago, amid prophecies of disaster, has become an assured demonstration. The North American is more highly regarded now perhaps than ever before. In hundreds of newspaper offices throughout the country it is studied as a model in the attractive presentation of news, and particularly for its forceful editorials.

In fact, the North American is held by the progressive thought of the country, notably among the leaders in Congress, to be the chief journalistic exponent of such great questions as conservation, honest tariff revision, effective control of corporations, equal opportunities for all in every activity in life, scientific sanitation, pure food, improved methods in education, municipal government, taxation, road building, the guarding of public health and other problems; and above all the welfare of the child, the future citizen.

In politics, as has been made clear, the North American is for progressive Republicanism; in economics it is for the principle of conservation, not only of natural resources, but of human life and energy. In general it is for human rights above property rights, and for every movement which tends to lighten burdens and brighten lives.

E. A. Van Valkenburg states the North American's policy as follows: "In the most general terms, the policy of the North American has been to stand for liberty, for equal opportunity, for charity and for uplifting.

"An instant criticism of this statement will be, that the program, far from being unique, is deadly commonplace. All newspapers uphold these principles. There is none so wicked as deliberately to fight against liberty or equal opportunity, none so base as to despise charity and the uplifting of men. But the North American is different because it has stood for these things in practise, as well as in theory. Its success, which has attracted and puzzled experienced newspaper men the country over, has come not merely through having a policy, but through having a policy and living up to it, living up to it in the face of organized opposition, desperate assaults, the estrangement of friends and heavy handicaps in business."

E. A. Van Valkenburg resigned as publisher and editor of the North American concluding an editorship of a full quarter of a century in the second week of November, 1924. He resigned also as President of the North American Publishing Co., thus severing all active relationship with the publication. It was reported at that time that Mr. Curtis had considered buying the North American and merging it with the Philadelphia Public Ledger. The paper then was administrated by Fred F. Forbes who had been managing editor, H. B. Sutherland remaining as associate editor and James P. Considine who had been secretary, remaining as general manager. Associated with them was J. B. Robinson, who continued as treasurer of the company.

It was stated that Mr. Van Valkenburg was compelled to seek a prolonged period of rest which had long been advised by his physician and friends.

Van Valkenburg was a giant figure for many years in Philadelphia journalism and politics. For nearly a quarter of a century he made the North American a fighting paper, vigorous, virile, uncompromising and extremely able. He led scores of campaigns in the city and State and it has been said of him that no American editor had reaped so rich a crop of enemies.

Writing for EDITOR & PUBLISHER at the time of Mr. Van Valkenburg's resignation, an EDITOR & PUBLISHER correspondent said:

"It is certain there has never been a more hated personage in the history of Pennsylvania journalism or Pennsylvania politics, but everyone of these persons who hated Van Valkenburg and has consistently hated the North American and all it stood for were those who politically and otherwise feared the limelight of exposure."

In 1899 Van Valkenburg persuaded John Wanamaker to buy the Philadelphia North American, which then consisted of a little more than a respectable name, plus a circulation of about 2,500. Later, the late Thomas B. Wanamaker took over his father's interest in the publication. From a loss approximating $350,000 a year from a circulation of approximately 200,000 and sound profit—that was Van Valkenburg's achievement in the first ten years of his editorship.

In addition to being a remarkably well informed and effective editor, Van Valkenburg was a powerful business man. After he had secured a considerable circulation he told Mr. Wanamaker that the North American's advertising policy was outrageous in that it made one price to the "big fellow" and another to the "small fellow". He said that he wanted to "equalize these conditions" and Mr. Wanamaker asked him "what it would cost to stick to the card." Van Valkenburg said that he could not tell. All he knew was that $400,000 worth of advertising contracts were about to expire and if the rates were held level some of the short-enders would drop out. Mr. Wanamaker agreed and the rates were made level and some of the short-enders did drop out. The slaughter of advertising contracts upon the bloody angle of principle became first a battle and then a massacre. But it soon righted itself under the insistent pronouncement of "square deal" policy of Van Valkenburg.

Although he has been a newspaper publisher only a dozen years, Mr. Curtis has already purchased five dailies and established one of his own, spending millions of dollars in newspaper property, in Philadelphia and New York.

He went to Philadelphia when he was 26 years old. There he confined himself to publishing various magazines until Jan. 1, 1913, when he purchased the Philadelphia Public Ledger from Adolph S. Ochs of the New York Times for $2,000,000. In this purchase he was joined by John Dribble, of Philadelphia, later buying Mr. Dribble's share. It has been said he bought the Public Ledger to fulfill a boyish dream, for he has admitted that that newspaper under the ownership of George W. Childs and others had so stirred his ambitions that he wanted to become the owner of a journal of that type.

A year later, because he wanted to use his plant to the full capacity, he established the Evening Public Ledger. This daily first appeared on September 14, 1914.

On June 28, 1918, Mr. Curtis purchased the Philadelphia Telegraph and scrapped it. He had wanted it mainly for its Associated Press membership. He purchased the Philadelphia Times and obtained its A. P. service.

Rodman Wanamaker sold him the Philadelphia Press in September, 1920, and he consolidated it with the Public Ledger. The Press had been established in 1857 and it had become one of the leading newspapers of the city. In the year Mr. Curtis bought it, there was a shortage of news print. The Press had a very desirable paper contract. For this paper contract and for a 30,000 daily circulation and 100,000 Sunday, Mr. Curtis paid $1,000,000. He claims to have retained all this circulation for the Ledger.

On January 1, 1924 he entered the New York field with his purchase of the New York Evening Post.

"BEST KILLING" GETS PAGE 24 IN CAMDEN

Judge Publishes Crimeless Newspaper for a Day—Local Public Opinion 2 to 1 Against It

Local opinion was two to one against a crimeless newspaper, according to H. T. Saylor, managing editor, when the experiment was tried for a day last week on the Camden (N. J.) Courier.

Former Judge John B. Kates, who conducted the experiment, was at the managing editor's desk. The chief of police of Gloucester, N. J., two miles away, fought a hand to hand engagement with a fugitive bandit, and shot his man dead. Judge Kates ordered three paragraphs on the story, and told the make-up man to put it on page twenty-four.

Describing the experiment in a statement written for EDITOR & PUBLISHER, Mr. Saylor said:

"The people like the crimeless newspaper.

"The people don't like the crimeless newspaper.

"You read the letters to the editor and you take your choice. There was a terrific public reaction from all parts of the country to the crimeless Courier of last Tuesday. Letters poured in from Saskatoon and Fort Worth from San Diego to Penobscot. About 60 per cent of them favored the idea of a crimeless Courier but when Courier reporters stopped the average run of people in the street the reaction was a little better than two to one in favor of playing up crime Judge John B. Kates, editor for a day, stuck the best murder of the month on page 24 and he 'played up' constructive news of national politics, local civic movements, and symposiums by leading citizens. When his day's work was done he expressed himself completely satisfied.

"'Just the kind of a paper I want to see,' he said.

"He refused to run a snappy serial story. Among other things that action brought more complaint from subscribers than any other one change he effected.

"Judge Kates was intensely practical. He attempted no radical change in make-up or style. He was assisted by two friends as associate editors, Patrick H. Harding, widely known South Jersey lawyer, and Joseph Costello, secretary of the Delaware River Bridge Commission. Both of them are former newspaper men. Both of them in the old days were unusually clever crime reporters. They didn't smpathize with the Judge but they carried out his orders. Only one thing is certain as a result of the experiment, it brought the Courier a million dollars worth of national advertising."

WISCONSIN GAG BILL VETOED BY GOVERNOR

"Espionage" Act Preventing Paper from Printing Derogatory Statements Regarding Banks Called a Menace

By vetoing on May 6 the Wisconsin "espionage" bill, passed by both houses of the legislature, that would have made it a crime to circulate verbally or through the printed word any statements derogatory to co-operatives or banking institutions, Gov. J. J. Blaine has removed a possible club over the free press of Wisconsin.

Gov. Blaine did not mince words in his veto message to denounce the sponsors of the bill and the suppression of free speech and free press that they attempted. His message in part said:

"I know of no demand or necessity for this kind of espionage law. The next logical step will be to include within the terms of the law any corporation doing business in this state, and in fact, there is no limit to which the system of espionage can not or may not go.

"This law is as drastic as were the war espionage acts. They were at least pretended to protect the government in time of war, while this act establishes an espionage system in time of peace. There were those of us who believed that the wartime espionage act was actually harmful to the best interests of the government and to the soldiers fighting on the battle fields. History has demonstrated since the close of the war that had citizens been entitled to express their honest opinions, this nation might have been saved the saturnalia of graft that was permitted to be carried on because the lips of patriotic citizens were sealed.

"And yet there are those who now propose to extend this same system of espionage in peace times, that will drive fear into the hearts of honest citizens and hold over their heads the threatening and menacing penal statute, at times when their voices should not be stilled.

"Those of us who still retain confidence in the fundamental principles of American government cannot give our approval to any system of espionage, no matter what the pretenses may be of those who have the boundless zeal to create new laws and new crimes."

McCORMICK'S WILL FILED

Widow Gets All of $2,000,000 Estate of Illinois Senator

CHICAGO, May 12.—An inventory of the estate of Medill McCormick, late United States Senator from Illinois, was filed in the Probate court yesterday by Attorney Alfred Austrian of Mayer, Meier, Austrian and Platt, counsel for the estate. Mr. McCormick was a brother of Col. R. R. McCormick, co-publisher of the Tribune.

The inventory reflects the senator's faith in his country and its resources, probate officials said. They pointed out that three-fourths of the $2,000,000 estate in State and federal farm loan bonds, State of Illinois service compensation bonds and municipal school, road and improvement bonds. Under Senator McCormick's will the entire income from the estate is to be paid his widow, Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick. At her death, unless she makes other disposition in her will, her three children will share the estate.

Two Berlin Correspondents Return

Charles S. Smith and Carl D. Groat, representing the Associated Press and the United Press respectively in Berlin, returned to this country this week. Mr. Smith plans to remain here six weeks, when he will return to Germany. While here he plans to visit his mother at Portland, Ore. Mr. Groat is to take charge of the cable department of the U. P., with headquarters in the New York office.

The Middleport (N. Y.) Niagara Herald has increased its capital from $25,000 to $50,000.

24 newspapers one high standard

The progressive's opinion today is the conservative's opinion tomorrow. Every established and accepted idea was once "radical."

Even the custom of the daily bath was once forbidden by law and frowned upon by physicians.

Scripps-Howard Newspapers dare to stand for ideas they believe to be right and for the general good.

They believe, with Dante, that if they give light, the people will find their own way.

That this liberal, tolerant, fearless, virile editorial policy wins an unusual loyalty from readers is shown by growing circulations in the face of reader-bribery with valuable premiums and other enticements by competitors who make no distinction between the Synthetic and the Genuine.

porated for $250,000, all paid, and has as its president Dr. F. T. Thoburn Nason, according to a statement given EDITOR & PUBLISHER. Mr. Nason is president of the City Bank of McKeesport, of the Columbiana Foundry and of the McKeesport Tin Plate Company. J. T. McClane, hardware dealer is vice-president; G. P. Gamble, secretary; and J. W. Stevenson, treasurer.

The exact date of publication cannot be given until the new Journal building now being erected in the heart of the city is completed. The plant will be equipped with new machinery including a 24-page Duplex tubular press, and a battery of seven Intertypes.

The Journal will be independent politically, according to the announcement. It will have International News.

Mr. Alexander, editor of the Journal, sold the Zanesville (O.) Signal six years ago. He was prominent in the civic and political life of Ohio, having been postmaster of Zanesville, president of the Chamber of Commerce, and president of the Good Roads Association. Last fall he was Democratic candidate for Congress in the 15th Ohio district.

The Journal will be distinctive in having a woman as managing editor. Miss Helen W. John started her newspaper career on the Zanesville Signal. She was successively proofreader, society editor, reporter, and city editor. For a few years she was with the Trenton (N. J.) Times.

L. D. Sinclair, advertising manager comes from the Bakersfield (Cal.) Echo.

W. K. Hoyt, business manager and head of the classified department was recently with the Trenton Times in similar capacities. The circulation manager, William Giesman, is well known in Cincinnati, Columbus, Akron, Indianapolis and other cities.

Circulation is being signed by straight solicitation without the use of premiums or schemes and will exceed 15,000 at the start it was stated.

The S. C. Beckwith Special Agency, New York, will represent the Journal in the national advertising field.

CLARK NOW CITY EDITOR

Succeeds "Will" Wayne on Baltimore News—Southwick Joins Staff

Harry Clark has been named the city editor of the Baltimore News, the Hearst evening paper in Baltimore. He succeeds "Will" Wayne, who came from Syracuse with Robert McCabe, the managing editor of the paper, when Mr. Hearst bought the Baltimore News and the Baltimore American two years ago. He has served in various editorial capacities on the news and was made city editor a year ago.

Al L. Southwick, who has been with the Boston American for a number of years, comes to Baltimore as the news editor succeeding Mr. Clark.

VOLUME OF CHURCH ADVERTISING INCREASING

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

HOUSTON, Tex., May 14.—Church advertising in all its phases was thoroughly considered at the Church Advertising Departmental of the A. A. C. W. convention.

A questionnaire, sent to 200 newspapers in an effort to find out how the church could co-operate with the press, formed the basis of an interesting address made May 12, by the Rev. John T. Brabner Smith, Chicago, in charge of the secular press publicity of the World Service Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Two-thirds of the newspapers solicited replied, Mr. Smith said.

He had arrived at the conclusion, he declared, that churches will always get a square deal from the newspapers.

Among eighteen questions asked were: "Is crime news increasing?"; "What in your judgement, is the effect upon criminal activity of the 'playing up' of crime news?" and "Can the Church be of any service to the newspapers in a campaign against crime?"

Fifty-two newspapers answered the question regarding the increase of crime news. Twenty-seven said there was more crime news; seventeen said there was less.

"The majority of answers seemed to be to the effect that crime itself was increasing, but that the newspapers were minimizing the printing of it," Mr. Smith said.

"In the printing of crime and crime news, the Bible is certainly a good text book for editors and publishers," he commented.

"One way to get rid of crime news is for the Church to convert the criminals.

"At the present time, there is the greatest opportunity for a closer and more cordial co-operation between the Church and the newspapers."

He said every church should have a fund for regular, systematic and sensible advertising in the newspaper.

Volume of church advertising is increasing literally by leaps and bounds, according to William N. Bayless, of the Tiffany-Bayles Company, Cleveland, O.

"Time was when church advertising was looked at askance by conservative church boards," he said. "It smacked too much of other jazzy innovations that were being introduced right and left. But slowly church advertising has forced its way upwards until now it is indeed a conservative church that does not see in advertising a major means of broadening its influence.

"The volume of church advertising has, therefore, increased amazingly in the last few years.

"The most efficient medium for church advertising is the newspaper. I think the time is going to come, and it is not far off, when the individual churches will cease to spend their money in small individual announcements, but will pool their interests and make common caise in large full page advertisements in the daily press."

"To arrest the attention and secure the interest of the unchurched millions on religious matters is undoubtedly one of the biggest questions of the day," said Graham Stewart, of the People's Popular Monthly, Des Moines, Ia.

"How to Win the Co-operation of the Newspapers" was the subject chosen by Frank LeRoy Blanchard, director of public relations of Henry L. Doherty & Co., New York.

COMMUNITY AD GROUP CHANGES NAME

Reorganized Department Still Headed by C. F. Hatfield—Growth of Field Told in Speeches—Resolutions Adopted

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

HOUSTON, Tex., May 14.—During its final session Thursday morning, the community advertising department voted to change its name to "the American Community Advertising Association of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World."

Future plans of this organization contemplate intensive direction of its work through subdivision into geographical districts, chairman of which will give special attention to the problems of communities near at hand.

Resolutions were adopted recommending to the attention of Chambers of Commerce the plan of rating cities on a basis of health protection and disease prevention devised by the American Public Health Association.

Further resolutions urged the systematic advertising by the United States of its great natural resources on the ground that these are too little known even by American travelers.

Charles F. Hatfield, re-elected president of the Community Advertising Department, opening the session of that group, May 13, called for passage of resolution asking for an appropriation out of A. A. C. W. general funds for the purpose of getting community advertising statistics.

"Community advertising," he said, "national, state, and municipal, is in its infancy, and the possibilities are so tremenduous that they cannot be measured and the attractive part of it is that it is creative, bringing new business of benefit to all media of advertising.

"Community advertising is reaching the the world since the London convention. I have no doubt that the program last year emphasized the importance of this phase of advertising.

"During my administration with the Community Advertising Department, covering a period of nine years, eight of which I have been president, I have seen this phase of advertising grow in the United States from an expenditure of less than $100,000 to more than $4,000,000, and this does not include the millions spent by the government, the railroads, public utilities, banks, insurance, retail stores, health resorts and other specialized groups.

"Although community advertising is still very young, accomplishments in it already have been recorded in more than 100 American and Canadian communities, and yet the surface has been merely scratched."

Taxation as a source of revenue for community advertising was discussed by Jefferson Thomas, of Jacksonville, Fla.

"To sell Missouri to Missourians and then to the rest of the world," was described as the first definite aim of the Missouri Association, by George A. Pickens, general secretary.

UTILITY GROUP ELECTS

Buffalo the Wonder City of America

"Buffalo—the Center of the Consuming Market"

—JOHN A. PIQUET

The following are extracts from an article, one of a series, by JOHN A. PIQUET entitled "Garden Spots of Industry," in INDUSTRIAL MANAGEMENT, March, 1925:

"Buffalo is perhaps the best example of the typical manufacturing site of history—the city on the water and trade-route, as most of the great cities have been. The Buffalo area, from the city to Niagara Falls and roundabout, stands at the cross-roads of a continent. Here the interior meets the beginning of the exterior. Here railroad and water merge. To the north the country's greatest waterpower; to the south, coal fields and natural gas. Here is the center of the consuming market. Buffalo is the natural metropolis of a region from Virginia to Labrador and from the Rockies to the Atlantic. Buffalo adds industries as New York loses them. Buffalo will keep on growing steadily because it offers a location that cuts cost in transportation, power, and selling. It will grow more as industries study scientific location in greater numbers."

"Nature gave Buffalo its unparalleled location, but man improved on it. This city . . . . is one of steady growth, and no mushroom booms or incidents of immigration supply or financial power are responsible for what it or they have accomplished. The Buffalo area has excellent chances of becoming the first manufacturing district in America as time goes on, for it possesses all the factors of industrial supremacy, while New York and Chicago do not."

Buffalo's wonderful industrial development means a great deal to the advertiser. It means more buyers of advertised goods—a great responsive market. While Buffalo has its attractions for industry it is equally attractive to the advertiser—because 80 per cent. of the buyers here are reached with one advertising cost through one newspaper—The News.

ADVERTISING AGENTS AT HOUSTON HEAR INSTRUCTIVE ADDRESSES

Among Speakers in Three Days Were John Benson, O'Shaughnessy and Kenner on Wide Range of Subjects

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

HOUSTON, Tex., May 14.—H. S. Gardner presided over the several sessions of the American Association of Advertising Agencies and several excellent addresses were heard.

Speaking on Tuesday, John Benson, of Benson, Gamble and Crowell Advertising Agency, said:

"There are too many dealers and too many jobbers. Relatively few of them are efficient. There is not enough business to go around. On a small volume, retail overhead eats up the profit. The gross is very high; the net very small.

"The chain store has made a real beginning in the right direction. The movement will grow. It and the mail order house will force the less efficient tradesmen out of business. Local stores will become, more and more, supply depots for the convenience of the public. They will carry meritorious merchandise known to and believed in by the consumer requiring less salesmanship to move.

"Of course there will always be a place for the individual merchants of special merchandising ability. He will continue to make an individual appeal in his own locality in proportion to his merit."

"In this evolution of trading initiative, advertising is bound to have a decisive role to play. It holds the key to consumer demand. It has the power to induce purchasing initiative. But we will have to do a more scientific job. We must make advertising more influential with the consumer; and get more effectiveness out of the advertising dollar.

"As we look back upon advertising we see what a great force it has been, how effectively it has worked, on the whole. But that was under conditions which may not much longer prevail. The entire machinery of distribution is going to change. With a greater emphasis upon consumer demand than before, advertising appeal has a bigger responsibility to commerce.

"In the first place, advertising volume is a handicap. There is now so much advertising that busy people, distracted by motoring, movies and radio, excited by sensational news, pay less heed to it. They glance at the advertisements rather than read them. They get into their minds certain trade names flashed at them boldly and persistently, names which they more or less uncritically accept when pushed at them over the counter by a dealer. The still rely on the dealer to select for them any one of these trade names he prefers.

"What advertising needs is more individuality of thought, new points of view, interesting and informative copy. Irrevelant interest, curiousity headlines, pictorial attractions, are being overdone. There should be more direct appeal to self-interest, a more resourceful handling of the uses and merits of a product.

"There is not enough grip in headlines to attract readers who are or may be interested in the product. Headlines should have more meat in them. They should convey the message at a glance. A hundred people glance at advertisements to one who reads the text. The larger audience must be influenced favorably and made to yield a better percentage of interested readers.

"It seems to me the advertisement writer should follow more closely the technique of the news writer, in satisfying the public. He must give the reader something worth while for the pains of reading; otherwise the latter will quit. This is important, not only for the individual advertisement but also for the whole business of advertising. Unless people get something worth while out of them they won't continue to read them. They won't waste the time.

"Advertising influence would be more effective if every advertisement would look through the reader's eyes and have his interest at heart. It should never mislead. It should never disappoint with bold, intriguing headlines and no substance to follow. It should avoid sweeping claims. It should be interesting and informative, sincere and specific.

"It seems to me that the advertising of the future cannot lean so heavily upon stimulating the channels of trade into selling effort. It must rely more upon consumer influence. It must be so informative and convincing that the consumers will definitely prefer the product and demand it from the dealer."

"Many people are under the impression that American advertising is the best in the world," said H. J. Kenner, vice-president and general manager of the Better Business Bureau of New York City before the Advertising Agencies Departmental. "Perhaps it is true in quantity. Is this true of its quality?

"You may answer, 'yes,' and point to the growth of science in advertising; its greater efficiency in copy, art and typography and the bigger and cheaper circulations attained by mediums, to the end that more people may be intrigued to read and respond to advertising.

"But an important consideration is the possible increase in the number of those who believe advertising when they read it and who continue to believe after they use the article which advertising persuaded them to buy. Since the volume of advertising has attained satisfactory proportions, can we not turn further attention profitably to the increase of its value in terms of reader experience and reader confidence?

"A large musical instrument organization in New York, national as well as local, has not used a certain newspaper of large circulation in New York because the manager of that firm has objected to what he called the "gyp" piano advertising which it carried. To his mind the newspaper has achieved quantity but has lacked quality in its advertising columns; which have pulled results but have penalized consumers. His view is that diminishing returns would rapidly set in for piano advertisers in that medium were it not that the circulation is very large and is growing larger. The mortality of reader-confidence is offset by the new life thus injected. This newspaper, however, has been aware of the weakness which attaches to lineage volume resting upon such conditions and it has taken practical steps to improve lineage quality; one of the steps being definite co-operation with the Better Business Bureau of New York City.

"Some advertising managers of newspapers estimate that harmful effect of misleading advertising by whether or not they receive complaint from a reader. This measure is very unreliable. Readers lack knowledge of merchandise or securities, usually they do not know their confidence is abused until it is too late to seek redress or register dissatisfaction to a newspaper. Bad experiences with advertising educate readers unfavorably against it, but the process is silent. They turn their backs and the damage is the greater because they keep it to themselves. The field of fake financial advertising furnishes overwhelming proof of this.

"Reader complaints are symptoms of sick advertising. Rather than wait for signs of sickness it is much better to discover the causes and apply a prophylactic. The new science in advertising as in medicine should be prevention of destructive practices which poison reader-confidence and weaken advertising's productivity. That is where advertising agencies can use the vigilance movement to advantage. No group of men should be more active in such prevention than advertising agencies.

"The advertising world looks respectfully and expectantly to advertising agencies to lead in the quality of thought necessary for this inescapable, important task."

James O'Shaughnessy said:

"Advertising needs organization more than other lines of business was the argument developed by James O'Shaughnessy, secretary of A.A.A.A., before the agency departmental May 13.

"Confidence, which is the soul of advertising, must have evidences on which to rest, and the evidence must be sufficient.

"Since they cannot be shown impressively as inventories, they are produced in the lengthening record of adequate performances. Today it is unnecessary, even to absurdity, to ask a business man to have confidence in advertising. That confidence is a commercial fixture is shown in the rapid growth of advertising each year since the American Association of Advertising Agencies was formed."

"Advertising today is a sales force—a force for sales," Arthur W. Sullivan, vice-president of the Joseph Richards Company, Inc., New York told members of the advertising agency departmental, May 13.

"It is an equally important force for sales—only in somewhat different fashion—as the two-legged sales force which is out calling on the trade and eating German fried potatoes out of bird baths in small town hotels. Advertising doesn't have to eat German fried potatoes, but sometimes it has to eat crow.

"In short; the right kind of advertising is so important a force for sales that it enables John Salesman to sell more goods to more customers in less time and at greater profit."

New York Advertising Men Return Duty Paid on Flag by British

American advertising men plan to protest to high officials of the government, because duty was exacted on a Union Jack brought by the British delegation for presentation to Houston as a token of international friendship.

Before leaving for Houston, May 7, New York advertising men reimbursed the British delegation the $12 duty charge.

Why the Disparity between Advertising Values and Advertising Costs in Cincinnati?

The local (city and suburban) circulation of the Cincinnati Times-Star is 2.5 times the daily local circulation claimed by the leading Cincinnati morning newspaper. Yet—

The Times-Star carried 2.6 times as many lines of total advertising as the leading morning newspaper carried in the same 314 publication days last year, including all classifications.

The Times-Star carried 2.8 times as many lines of total display advertising as the leading morning newspaper.

The Times-Star carried 2.7 times as many lines of local display advertising as the leading morning newspaper.

The Times-Star carried 3.2 times as many lines of national display advertising as the leading morning newspaper.

But, the line rate for display advertising in the Times-Star is only 1.2 times that of the same morning newspaper.

Again—the local circulation of the Times-Star is 1.4 times the combined local daily circulation of both Cincinnati morning newspapers. Yet—

The Times-Star carried 1.9 times as many lines of display advertising as both Cincinnati morning newspapers combined.

But, the line rate for display advertising in the Times-Star is only .66 of the combined line rates of the two morning newspapers.

Think it over, Mr. Space Buyer.

BOOK BANQUET ENDS JOURNALISM WEEK

Death of Herbert Quick, Following Speech, Shocks Delegates—O'Shaugnessy Speaks at Closing Sessions

(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

COLUMBIA, Mo., May 12.—More information, interpretation and inspiration on every angle of the journalism profession than seemed possible to crowd into five short days and evenings. That was the general feeling among the departing visitors of the Sixteenth Annual Journalism Week at the University of Missouri here, May 4-8.

The legal rights of newspapers, tendencies in cartooning, the significance of radio from the newspaper standpoint, the cross-word puzzle and other circulation assets, drawing the line on free publicity, how to train country correspondents in accuracy and news judgment, how foreign correspondents of American news services operate—these were a few of the many diverse problems discussed this year.

Only the after-shock of the death of Herbert Quick, nationally known editor and author, one of the specially chosen speakers for the closing "Book Banquet," marred this year's event. Mr. Quick died in the University Hospital here Sunday, May 10, of a complication of diseases which attacked his heart. Arriving ill on Friday, he was taken to the hospital immediately, and got out of a sick bed, against the advice of physicians, to keep his speaking engagement for banquet at the Columbia Country Club that night.

"We may part with statues, we may part with paintings, we may part with all the arts with far less loss than we may part with books," Mr. Quick had said in his Book Banquet address, the last he ever made.

Mr. Quick, himself, was the author of many books and was a frequent contributor to many of the leading magazines of the country. In addition, he had served as mayor of Sioux City, Ia., from 1892 to 1902. He was 64 years old.

The lasting things of life with which neither the changes of science nor the perishable structures of man can compete were stressed at the Book Banquet. Perhaps the lofty spirit of the entire evening was best epitomized by Dean Walter Williams when he solemly declared that after all else of today should disappear, "literature and religion will remain as the two eternal forces."

Other speakers at the banquet were Llewellyn Jones, literary editor of the Chicago Evening Post; James T. Williams, Jr., editor of the Boston American; President Stratton D. Brooks of Missouri University; and George A. Mahan of Hannibal, Mo. The latter brought a gavel out of the old home of Mark Twain for presentation to the University. A stack of books donated by leading publishers was presented to each guest.

After opinions were exchanged as to the advisability of the purchase of casting boxes by country newspapers, with the intention of using mat service, it was concluded that the purchase of such equipment was justifiable if an effort was made to secure enough foreign advertising to make the use worth while.

Officers of the School of Journalism Alumni Association elected for the coming year are R. Magee, president; Mrs. G. D. Smith; first vice-president and Miss Sara Lockwood, secretary-treasurer. Regional vice-presidents elected are Ward Neff, Oscar Riley, Frank Hedges, J. B. Powell, Mrs. Guy Lacoste, Mary Paxton Keeley and O. K. Armstrong.

A dinner was given to the Association of Past Presidents of the Missouri Press Association Wednesday by Col. J. West Goodwin, publisher of the Sedalia (Mo.) Bazoo. The guests were W. R. Painter, Carrolton Democrat; William Southern, Jr., Independence Examiner; Omar D. Gray, Sturgeon Leader; H. F. Childers, Troy Free Press; C. M. Harrison, Booneville Republican; J. R. Lowell, Moberly; E. L. Purcell, Illmo, Mo.; Ovid Bell, Fulton Gazette; H. S. Sturgis, Neosho Times; J. Kelly Pool, Jefferson City; William H. Zorn, West Plains Gazette; Fred Hull, Maryville Tribune; Eugene B. Roach, Carthage Democrat; Asa W. Butler, Albany Capital, Marshal Gordon, Robert L. Hill, Prof. Frank L. Martin and Dean Walter Williams.

The Missouri Press Association, before adjournment, passed a resolution inviting the National Editorial Association to hold its 1926 meeting in St. Louis. Officers of the Missouri Press Association will be elected at a meeting to be held next fall at a place not yet determined upon.

Patronage of advertising and news service agencies by country newspapers came in for much discussion by the Missouri Press Association. Disapproval was expressed by many members in regard to methods of the American Press Association. The sentiment of the Missouri Association concerning this agency is to be ascertained by careful inquiry and a report will be submitted at the fall meeting.

It was the opinion of most of the members at one of the round table discussions that the 30 per cent commission charged by most service agencies for placing foreign advertising is prohibitive to the average country newspaper owner, and that some other way of developing the patronage of foreign advertising should be found.

How the smaller newspapers may share in national advertising was brought out by James O'Shaughnessy, executive secretary of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, in an address Thursday on "Getting National Advertising for the Country Newspaper."

Mr. O'Shaughnessy dwelt upon the use of the phrase, "A national campaign" in the advertising business, defining it as "a campaign of advertising which covers a substantial percentage of the homes in two or more of the four great commercial divisions of the country." He pointed out that while the use of metropolitan newspapers alone could make a national campaign, the use of local media is a means of intensifying activity.

"National campaigns and the national market are observed, under analysis, to be groups of more or less defined units of territory on one hand and local markets on the other," he said. "Some markets larger, some smaller, some compact, others scattered."

Mr. O'Shaughnessy took time to answer the belief in some quarters that advertising agencies use the larger units of circulation because they make a great amount of money on a small amount of work.

"The advertising agency, except in rare and indefensible instances," he declared. "does not make money out of advertising failures. To say they do is just as unfair and untruthful as to say that all merchants sell ill gotten goods, or that all newspapers lie.

"The fact is that merchants must be honest in order to prosper, newspapers must tell the truth or they cannot continue, advertising agencies must make money for their clients or their clients will not go along with them."

Use of local newspaper space by merchants in small towns was urged as a means of overcoming the competition of the mail order houses in an address on "Advertising From the Standpoint of the Country Merchant" by John H. DeWild, manager of the merchants service department of the Ely & Walker Dry Goods Company of St. Louis.

That the country and small town newspapers are not doomed was the opinion expressed by Elmo Scott Watson, editor of the Publishers' Auxiliary of Chicago, in an address on "The Making of a Country Newspaper."

One of the most thorough presentations of the problems of the advertising end of the newspaper business was that of George M. Burbach, advertising manager of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. He described to the students the divisions of newspaper advertising and the working of the various departments. He divided the seven units of the Post-Dispatch advertising department as follows: local, national, merchandising, research, promotion and publicity, classified, and clerical.

Coolidge Praises National Oratorical Contest at Final Competition

What President Coolidge described as the "greatest competition of its kind ever held in the world" the National Oratorical Contest conducted by leading American newspapers came to end Friday night, May 8, when Robert Sessions, 15 years old, Birmingham, Ala., high school boy, was awarded first prize of $2,000 at the elimination finals held in the presence of a distinguished audience in the Washington Auditorium.

The committee of judges consisted of Chief Justice William Howard Taft and Justices Willis Van Devanter, Pierce Butler and Edward Terry Sanford, of the United States Supreme Court, and Attorney General John Garibaldi Sargent.

The other prize winners were: Eugene F. McElmeel, of Los Angeles, Cal., second, $1,000; Max N. Kroloff, of Sioux City, Ia., third, $500; Flora Longenecker, of Ilion, N. Y., fourth, $450; Asenath Graves, Washington, D. C., fifth, $400; George Stansell, of Chicago, sixth, $350; and Philip Glatfelter, of Columbia, Pa., seventh, $300.

In addition to President and Mrs. Coolidge, the platform contained many prominent figures in national life, including Secretary of the Treasury Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Navy Curtis D. Wilbur, Frank B. Noyes, publisher of the Washington Star and president of the Associated Press; Dr. John G. Tigert, U. S. Commissioner of Education, Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of Washington, D. C. schools; and Josiah Marvel, of Wilmington, Del.; chairman of the Americanization Committee of the American Bar Association.

The contest was backed by 28 daily newspapers throughout the country.

Here's an Investment of a Few Pennies That Pays Worth While Dividends!

What may be the lowest initial cost is not necessarily the lowest final cost. Trite, quite true, but worth bearing in mind. Such a situation prevails in the dry mat business today.

Certifieds are by no means the cheapest dry mats considering first cost alone. But when publishers take into consideration the fact that Certifieds do not have to be steamed for conditioning; that they require only a minimum of packing in open spaces; that they do not have to be oiled; that they do not buckle or wrinkle and that the plates cast from them are perfect, they find that the final reckoning shows our mats to be not only superior but actually the most economical to use.

We do not for a moment expect you to take our mere "say-so" for this. In fact we make it simple for you to check up on what we say so that you can demonstrate these facts to your own satisfaction.

A case of Certified Dry Mats is but a small investment; or, if you so prefer, samples are yours free of any charge or obligation.

In any event you owe it to yourself to check up on what publishers and stereotypers everywhere acclaim as the best DRY MAT yet.

Compare and you'll appreciate that the few extra pennies invested in Certifieds are the difference between uniformly good printing and indifferent printing results.

Quite a dividend from an investment of a few pennies.

General Bullard was one of the three Americans who commanded whole Armies in The Great War. He is the first to write the dramatic inside narrative of this country's decisive part, as Generals Pershing and Liggett have not yet spoken. His story is a real story, not a dry record. It is full of anecdotes, thrilling adventures, and hitherto untold incidents of vital historic importance. The serial, about 60,000 words, runs 29 days—for release now.

RECOLLECTIONS OF LORD GREY:

Ever since Sir Edward Grey, as British Foreign Secretary, dominated the politics of the Allied World when the Germans invaded Belgium in 1914, his memoirs have been awaited by all those who followed the momentous events of that day. He has spent years writing them, and the book will be issued in the Autumn by The Frederick A. Stokes Co. First serial rights to six articles selected from the memoirs (articles especially of interest in America) are offered for immediate release.

NEW BIOGRAPHY OF JOHN L. SULLIVAN:

It is wholly different from anything ever written about the most popular fighter of all times. The author, R. F. Dibble, has made a study of the picturesque John L. Here is the real story of the giant pugilist, writer, lecturer, showman—one of the most interesting figures in American life. The book is published by Little, Brown & Co. Subscribers to the serial rights (for immediate release) include The Boston Globe, San Francisco Chronicle, Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph, Chicago Daily News, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and Santa Barbara Press.

CRIME RIDDLES, by James C. Young:

Mysteries to solve! Mr. Young relates the story of a crime. The story is printed, but without a solution. The newspaper readers have a week in which to guess how the story ends. Then the answer is published. When the first Crime Riddle series appeared, last year, a number of editors offered prizes for the best guesses. Subscribers to the new Riddles, which are in a series of six released immediately, include the St. Paul Dispatch, Kansas City Star, Syracuse Herald, Buffalo Courier, Indianapolis News, and Winnipeg Tribune.

ATLANTIC CITY MERGER FOLLOWS PURCHASE

Press-Union Company Buys Gazette-Review and Sunday Gazette and Will Suspend Them May 16-17—Price Not Disclosed

The purchase of the Atlantic City (N. J.) Gazette-Review and Sunday Gazette, pioneer newspapers of Atlantic City by the Press-Union Company was announced this week.

Although the price was not made public, it is understood that a cash consideration of $125,000 is involved in the deal which gives the Press-Union publications sole possession of the daily newspaper field in Atlantic City.

With the sale of the Sunday Gazette, the Daily Press, which is published six days a week, will be issued on Sunday, for the first time since its inception. The Evening Union will not be effected by the sale, and it is expected that the Gazette-Review, long a rival of the Daily Press, will be discontinued.

Negotiations between Captain Harry E. Smith, one of the principal owners of the Gazette-Review and Albert J. Feyl of the Press-Union Company, were started several months ago. Captain Smith intends to retire from the publishing business.

The final issue of the Gazette-Review will be printed on Saturday, May 16, and the next day will be the last edition of the Sunday Gazette, which has been the only Sunday newspaper published in South Jersey, since 1891.

The Sunday Press is to make its initial appearance on May 24, according to an unofficial announcement of the Press-Union Company. Francis E. Croasdale, managing editor of the Daily Press and Evening Union, will direct the new edition of these newspapers. With but few exceptions, the editorial staff of the purchased newspapers will be combined with the Press-Union.

Besides Captain Smith, the other owners of the Gazette-Review publications are George H. Bailey and Alexander E. Finley. Congressman Isaac Bacharach, of the Second New Jersey District was associated with Captain Smith several years ago but has since withdrawn.

The Atlantic Review was first issued in 1872 by A. L. English, when Atlantic City had but a population of 1400. The Review was taken by John G. Shreve and A. M. Heston on March 8, 1884.

Several years later Mr. Shreve purchased the interests of Mr. Heston and continued publishing the daily newspaper until General Wallace bought it about 20 years ago.

Captain Smith, who bought the Sunday Gazette, which was founded by William McLaughlin in 1891, succeeded in purchasing the Daily Review and merged both newspapers about 1914.

HOPE TO SAVE SCHOOL

Texas U. Regents May Use Special Funds for Journalism Courses

AUSTIN, Tex., May 12.—The Texas University Journalism Department may be saved by the University regents. A petition from the journalism students, more than half of whom recite they would have to go out of Texas to complete their education, and from 4,000 students, faculty members and citizens, has been laid before the regents for consideration May 19.

The faculty members have agreed not to take other positions until after the regents meeting. Salaries can be continued out of adjustment funds, it is said, and M. E. Foster, publisher of the Houston Chronicle, and other regents have pledged their efforts to save the Department.

Gov. Miriam A. Ferguson recently vetoed all funds for the Journalism Department, following a similar action by her husband eight years ago which was overruled immediately after his impeachment.

INTERNATIONAL NOTE STRESSED AT HOUSTON

seize and hold many world's records. It was an American flying boat, the NC4, which first crossed the Atlantic Ocean. American Army pilots and engineers were the first to fly around the world. We have nothing to be ashamed of in the achievements of our pilots or the skill of those who have designed our airplanes; but what shall we say of those who have neglected to give us suitable legislation on which to build American air commerce?

"Every other world power has made provisions through a government bureau for promoting commercial aviation.

All great governments, except our own, guarantee by official inspection and certification, the air-worthiness of national aircraft and the skill and ability of their pilots and engineers.

"We do the same for 'those who go down to the sea in ships' but for years we have neglected to give equal safeguards to those who would go up in the air in planes.

"Furthermore, those of our citizens who would use the ocean are given by the Federal Government every conceivable aid to navigation.

"None of these things are provided for the commercial navigator of the air. We could have no progress in ocean navigation if there were no charts, buoys and lighthouses, no safe harbors, wharves and docks. We can not expect aviation to contribute toward world progress until similar aids have been provided for it.

"The past Congress did pass one bill which will be of great service in the development of commercial aviation. This bill authorizes the Postmaster General to make contracts with those who would conduct aerial mail routes. The government-owned transcontinental routes will be maintained at the government's expense, but the day has come when enterprising contractors may emulate the owners of the pre-railway stage coaches in venturing to establish services for which not only mail bags, but also passengers and express can be carried. One can already see the beginning of a new era.

"No one can see its end. If we are wise we will build adequate foundations for such progress. In the past those cities which have been so fortunate as by nature or by art to be provided with safe harbors have been enabled to prosper as seaports. In the future those cities which by nature or by art may be provided with adequate refuges for airplanes will likewise enjoy prosperity as air ports.

"That government which, with wisdom and foresight, makes the most careful preparation for the sound development of air navigation will be able to lead the way in world progress. Let us unite to advertise the approach of the era of flying—to urge adequate preparation and thereby facilitate world progress."

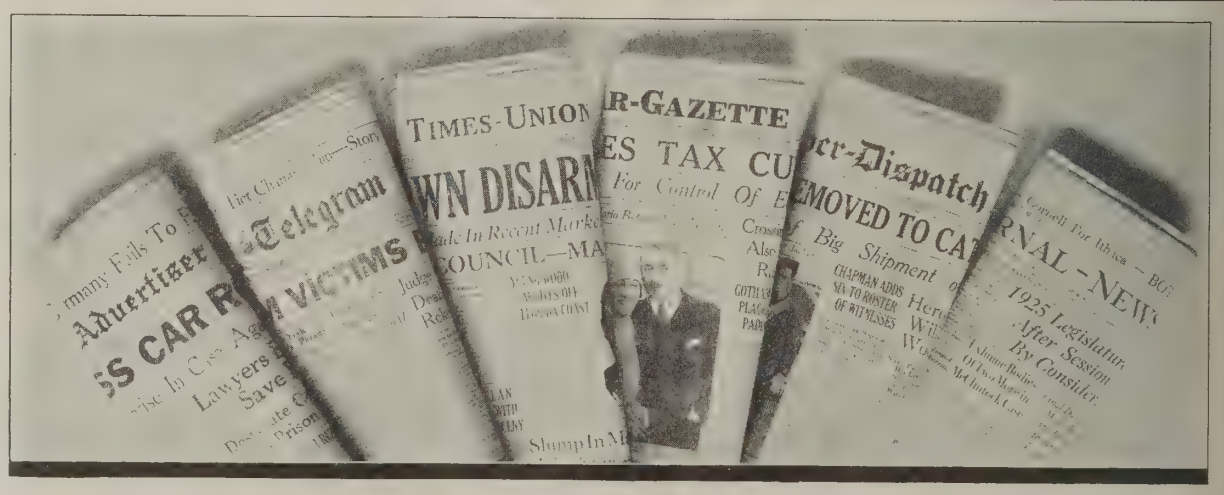
"Good will advertising is bringing about slowly but surely a better understanding on the public's part of their great interest in the utility business," Martin J. Insull, president of the Middle West Utilities Company told delegates attending general sessions May 12.

"This understanding," he said, "can only reflect itself in better service on the part of the utilities, as all organizations function more perfectly with an increase in public confidence, if for nothing else than the pride of showing in everything they do that they are entitled to confidence.

"A misinformed public opinion can destroy a business with quite as much rapidity as bad management," he said.

"The utilities are absolutely indispensable to modern business and social life. They represent an investment largely dependent on community and national good will.

"Scientific advertising to protect that investment through the dissemination to the public of accurate information both locally and nationally, does something even greater than protecting itself, in that it protects the public against ill-advised action, based on ignorance and prejudice, which reacts harshest upon the public itself."



Mr. Insull discussed in detail the three classes of educational advertising used by public utilities. He summarized these classes as:

"Service and merchandising advertising to promote business.

"Good will advertising to promote better understanding of the utility business in general, and in particular, of the policies and the aims and plans of the utility doing the advertising.

"Financial advertising to raise money for the utility and to offer customers and others an opportunity to invest their funds in an essential business carried on in their midst, and with the operations of which they may be in touch at all times."

The 21st annual ball of the association was held Tuesday night, following the dinner of the Board of Club Presidents, whose strenuous efforts to determine the next convention city are related elsewhere.

HOUSTON A TRIUMPH

C. KING WOODBRIDGE is an admirable selection for the presidency of the Associated Advertising Clubs. He has long been identified with important merchandising and national advertising, is a truly remarkable organizer, possessed of magnetic personality, kindly manner and is wholeheartedly in sympathy with the idealism of the international organization he is now to lead. Lou Holland's retirement after three golden years of progress has been suitably honored, but it needs to be said that advertising and all those who live by it shall never cease to give him credit for a contribution of incalculable worth.

Our correspondence indicates that the Houston convention has been the success that was confidently predicted. Texas sustained her reputation for hospitality in royal fashion.

The discussions were extraordinarily interesting and helpful. The more than 4,000 who participated must be refreshed in the spirit of the work, and no craftsman can fail of benefit from thorough reading of the proceedings. The "coming of age party" will remain large in the annals of the organization.

Philadelphia next! As our pre-convention number plainly indicated the next city on the A. A. C. W. card is to be the shrine city of American journalism. And, then, perhaps St. Petersburg, in lovely Florida, or glittering Detroit or stately Montreal in 1927? It is a coveted prize of the cities.

Don't ask for a job, hang your coat up on an idea.

CRIME IN THE NEWS

AFTER nearly 50 years of intimate connection with daily newspapers, Robert F. Paine says he is convinced that "sensational" treatment of criminal news suggest to weak minds heroism, rather than shame and disgust. "Every newspaper man of experience must have noticed," says he, "that peculiar crimes, suicides, fires and catastrophes come in cycles. I am convinced that, as to crimes, publicity, or rather, over-publicity, does have a certain effect in the way or suggestion."

Mr. Paine advises that instead of impressing a murderer or his punishment upon the public mind in heroic mold, reporters should present the effects of the man's shameful end upon the lives of his family, who really take the worst punishment, with no degree of heroism in it. A man commits suicide in some peculiar fashion and newspaper men know that somewhere someone will imitate the act. Mr. Paine suggests that a story which revealed the shame and agony felt by the family of the coward would have a deterrent effect.

Mr. Paine says: "The people are entitled to and will have the news, from one newspaper if not another. There is as much danger and damage to civilization and progress in suppression of the news as in the suppression of honest opinion. But it is the holy obligation and unimpeachable prerogative of the editor to determine the effect of his news publications upon public morals, law and order and the advancement of worth-while information.

"And, in the writer's humble opinion, nothing could be more senile and destructive of any decent purpose than to establish anything like 'a crime news department' in the daily paper, as has been attempted, in some instances."

News efficiency is the least discussed but the largest single factor in newspaper success.

CORRECTIONS

"IT takes talent to make a correction sound like an entirely new item," facetiously writes a paragrapher. It takes better talent to make a correction full, sincere, direct, with true intent to justify a wrong, insofar as it is possible to correct misstatements once made in print.

You like the man who comes clean. The public takes exactly the same view of published corrections.

Heaviness in the heart of man maketh it stoop; but a good word maketh it glad.—Proverbs XII; 25.

THE WINNING SPIRIT

IT is the spirit of public service that counts in journalism, upstairs, downstairs and all around the shop. Editors and reporters are zealous to give the reader a square deal, full measure and something fit for the human mind to bite upon in every column. Advertising men are keen to do the very best that can possibly be done to meet the requirements and fulfil the ambitions of those who are buying space, never neglectful of the "little fellow" nor permitting the paper to be used unfairly by those who have the greater power. Circulation men are on their toes to make distribution effective, satisfying the myriad requests of the readers. Business executives and staffs seek to do business honorably, thoroughly, economically and exactly. Mechanical departments are striving to make the paper show the maximum of print clarity, neatness, attractive display, with speed and scheduled delivery.

All this and more is possible when men are imbued with the spirit of public service. There is no substitute for that sense of duty. You cannot get comparable results from men employed for mere wages, nor by bossing and whip-lashing, nor by any artificial means. When love of the work is absent from the picture it is drab indeed. Conscious or sub-conscious altruism animates every true journalist.

All this seems trite and sentimental, but we believe it to be the essence of newspaper administrative science. By its application, through great leaderships, we have seen huge dailies rise from shoe-string beginnings. There is no instance of actual newspaper greatness which has not been built upon some true concept of valuable public service, to which the staff has rendered complete devotion, exceeding any promise of material reward.

Approximately 25 per cent of the news space in a leading morning newspaper, issued on Monday, was analyzed as being pure "hand-out," material which gave the reporter no more concern than carrying a prepared statement to the office.

AMAZING STUPIDITY

NOT long ago a press agent for an industrial concern exhibited in EDITOR & PUBLISHER's office a sheaf of postal cards returned from newspaper offices of America asking that publicity which was of the rankest graft order, be sent regularly to those papers for publication. The press agent felt that his trade was justified.

Edward L. Bernays, operating what he calls the National Household Service, is syndicating mats to newspapers which advertise the wares of Procter & Gamble, Hart, Schaffner & Marx, Cheney Brothers and others, in the guise of editorial matter. His handouts are plainly marked as "free" publicity furnished by the concerns which employ him to defeat the legitimate advertising rates and policies of newspapers.

The matter furnished is deceitful, from the viewpoint of the reader of any newspaper publishing it in that it is advertising in the form of editorial matter.

There is no mystery in this business insofar as Bernays and his clients are concerned. They are out to make money at the expense of newspapers. It is not possible for their trade to continue for long without the support of at least a few newspapers. My mystery surpassing human understanding lies in the fact that any newspaper publisher would accept and print an advertisement for Ivory Soap, Crisco, brand clothing or other merchandise as "news" or "feature." What type of mind is this? In the whole category of human simpletons none can be imagined more stupid than the publisher who validates Bernays' trade while deceiving his readers, impoverishing his own counting room and holding himself up to the ridicule of the newspaper profession.

If you do not fully, ardently, absolutely believe that newspaper advertising, sensibly and regularly used, sells merchandise, builds business, yields profit, is sound investment and not speculation, do not try to sell it.

ADVERTISE INSURANCE

NEWSPAPER advertising can sell insurance. But the great insurance companies of America are not using it as they should. Daily newspaper advertising is ideal when it hooks up with established local selling organization, and the insurance business is thus remarkably well organized. Print the names, addresses and telephone numbers of local agents under a national appeal and results will be manifold.

Thousands of insurance salesmen start out every morning to find prospects with no more destination than a kite thrown to the four winds. They blunder into your office and my shop, with the most awkward appeal that is made by any salesman of whom I know.

Properly organized newspaper advertising will give some enterprising insurance company a new edge. Local agents selling on commission should be willing to co-operate on the expense. The enterprise will be full of surprises. Millions of men and women want and needing insurance are never found by agents. Many will reply to the right kind of newspaper copy.

If you are appealing to the eleven-year-mind do not forget that it is largely moved by emotion, with deep sympathy for the oppressed and worshipful adoration of types in heroic mold.

THRIFT PUBLICITY

IT is up to the Washington ocrrespondents to refrain from discussing White House economy according to the New York Telegram and Evening Mail, which holds that newspaper reporting of the President's haberdashery is an improper and discourteous intrusion into private affairs. But it seems to EDITOR & PUBLISHER that a discussion of New England thrift as applied to national customs was invited, and what could be newsier than a new half-sole on a President's old shoe? But, we are bound to say that the half-sole cheats the new boot.

FOLKS WORTH KNOWING

THE naming of Royal Brougham as managing editor of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, brings to young newspaper reporters another story as romantic as any of Oliver Optic's most famous. He began his newspaper career only 13 years ago as a $7 a week office boy in the newspaper over which he now presides as the chief editorial director. And he is one of the youngest managing editors in America. He will not be 31 until next September.

ROYAL BROUGHAM

Brougham began as a gate-tender and copy chaser on the Post-Intelligencer when Scott Bone, formerly governor of Alaska, was editor. The next step was reporter; then assistant sporting editor and then sporting editor. On the recommendation of F. W. Eldridge, managing editor of the Los Angeles Examiner, Mr. Hearst personally approved the unusual elevation from the sports department to managing editor.

As a sport writer, Brougham was distinctly the modern type, with a breezy brisk style that, while it was slangy, nevertheless was faithful to facts, friendly to the game and interesting to the fans. He developed a talent for clever illustration and a nose for the unusual and catchy angle of presentation.

Brougham is also a most unusual exporting editor type. He does not smoke or drink.

PRESS ASSOCIATION NOTES

J. B. POWERS, assistant South American manager of the United Press Associations, and Mrs. Powers, sailed from New York May 9, on the American Legion for Buenos Aires. Mr. and Mrs. Powers were married April 27. Mrs. Powers was formerly Miss Carolien White of Atlantic City.

Julian Snyder, formerly manager of the United Press Cleveland bureau, has been transferred to the New York staff. He is succeeded in Cleveland by Raymond Bruner.

Nelson Riley, formerly on the staff of the St. Louis Star, has joined the New York staff of the United News.

John Miles has been appointed manager of the Los Angeles bureau of the United News. He was formerly on the staff of the Los Angeles Record.

MARRIED

WARD ANDREW NEFF, vice-president of the Corn Belt Farm Dailies, to Miss Lylian Louise Bingham of Chicago in that city last week.

John J. Ottinger, telegraph editor of the Des Moines (Ia.) Evening Tribune-News, to Mrs. Maude Ann Cole of Chicago, last week in Chicago.

A. G. White, sales and advertising manager of the Brown Shoe Company, St. Louis, to Miss Lucille Shaw of Pittsfield, Ill., April 22, in the latter city.

William Holt Wilcomb of Swampscott, Mass., a reporter on the Lynn Item, to Miss Margaret Newhall Benedict of Lynn, in Swampscott, May 10.

Lee C. Richardson, of the Lansing (Mich.) State Journal staff, to Mildred Mae Allen of Lansing, recently.

NEW PLANTS AND EQUIPMENT

WINONA (Minn.) REPUBLICAN-HERALD, H. G. White, editor, has ordered an additional deck for its 16-page Duplex Tubular press. The paper this year celebrates its 70th anniversary.

Arkansas City (Kan.) Traveler, R. C. Howard, editor, has ordered a 16-page Duplex tubular press which will supersede their Duplex flat bed press and increase their maximum page capacity from 10 to 16 pages.

Ludlow Typograph Company has announced Ludlow installations in the following newspaper plants: San Francisco (Cal.) Recorder; Miami (Fla.) Tab; Ocean City (N. J.) Sentinel; Bonn (Germany) General Anzeiger; San Francisco (Cal.) Daily News; Birmingham (England) Post; St. Petersburg (Fla.) Times; Philadelphia (Pa.) Inquirer.

Shawnee (Okla.) Morning News is making an extensive enlargement to its plant by the addition of a new pressroom and a new Duplex Tubular press.

The Best Feature of Them All

Editors are finding that the only feature that holds the day-to-day interest of ALL readers—all classes and all ages—is the picture page. Its appeal is ever new.

Central Press' daily full-page pictorial is used by more newspapers than any other, and it's CLEAN. It is used by metropolitan newspapers like the Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph, Birmingham News, Buffalo Times, Kansas City Journal-Post, Denver Rocky Mountain News, Louisville Post, Richmond News-Leader, San Diego Tribune and by nearly a hundred others.

Central Press mats are the best, giving clear impressions under all sorts of press conditions. Even our competitors admit that our page is the most attractive—it's made-up, not thrown together. Moreover, it is made-up so that it keeps its timeliness, and isn't "dead" before it reaches the distant editor.

You can buy the Central Press picture page for as many editions, or as many days of the week, as you can use it. Write today for proofs, prices and sample mats.

and Stonewall streets, 50 by 142½ feet, as a site for a future plant. The price is said to have been more than $100,000.

WITH THE SPECIALS

R. L. CONNER, one time advertising manager of the Cincinnati Post and the Ohio State Journal, and manager of Sunset Magazine, has joined the San Francisco selling staff of the Kimball-Mogensen Company, newspaper representatives.

Wm. J. Morton Company, special newspaper representatives, occupying offices in the Fifth Avenue Building, 200 Fifth Avenue, New York, for the past 13 years has moved to larger offices on the same floor.

Sam J. Perry, publishers' representative, New York, has moved from 7 West Sixteenth street to new quarters at 1480 Broadway.

William D. Ward, Tribune Building, New York, has been appointed Eastern representative for the Enid (Okla.) Eagle and Morning News.

S. C. Beckwith Special Agency, New York, has been appointed to represent the Philadelphia Daily News.

Powers & Stone, Inc., publishers' representatives, have been appointed to represent the Kingston (Ont.) Daily Standard, in the Eastern territory.

SCHOOLS

STUDENTS in the School of Journalism at the University of Iowa put out the Cedar Rapids (Ia.) Gazette, May 9. This is the second Iowa daily to be edited by these students this year, the first being the Des Moines Register. The class in community newspaper work also collected all the news and advertising for the Oxford (Ia.) Leader, weekly, and put out one edition of that paper.

Prof. John H. Casey of the School of Journalism of the University of Missouri will take the place of Prof. P. I. Reed who is in charge of courses in journalism at the University of West Virginia at Morgantown during the summer session. Prof. Casey will teach courses in feature writing, news, reporting, and composition and rhetoric.

Joseph M. Ripley, of Columbus, has been appointed editor of the Lantern, the daily publication, at Ohio State University.

Students from the classes in journalism of Ohio State University were in charge of the publication of the Columbus (O.) Citizen, May 9.

There are 85 candidates for the degree of Bachelor of Journalism at the School of Journalism of the University of Missouri. With this month's graduation, the school's list of graduates will total 625.

Students in the school of journalism and the school of architecture and allied arts of the University of Oregon have organized the John Henry Nash Graphic Arts Club for the purpose of stimulating interest in the study of fine printing and the kindred arts. Plans are under way for the establishment on the campus of a typographical museum in which will be illustrated the various historical periods of printing.

Nine students from the classes in journalism, Louisiana State University, made their third annual visit of inspection to the plants of the newspapers in New Orleans on May 5.

The Times

THE GREATEST POWER IN MODERN ADVERTISING

FOR nearly a century and a half The Times has been the outstanding national newspaper of Great Britain. Its great history, combined with an enterprising modern outlook; the authority with which it speaks, and the superb quality of its printing and production, maintain it in an unassailable position as the leader of the British Press.

And as it is the greatest force in journalism, so it is the greatest power in advertising. It is the one indispensable medium for all announcements intended for the wealthy official, professional and business classes.

Each day's issue speaks for itself. Both the volume and the character of the advertising carried by The Times prove how indispensable it is to the advertiser seeking an entrance to the British market.

Advertising men who visited England last year were able to test these facts on the spot. But The Times is at any time happy to supply further information. If you desire to know more of Britain's greatest advertising medium, get in touch with

The Times.

PRINTING HOUSE SQUARE
LONDON E. C. 4, ENGLAND

DURING 1924

The Times carried a greater volume of advertising than any other newspaper published in Great Britain.

When in ENGLAND read THE TIMES

! Not In Lineage — But In the Confidence of the People of Southern California

Los Angeles Illustrated Daily News

has again demonstrated that it stands first and occupies a pre-eminent position for the discriminating type of advertising space which places the value of earned good-will above mob psychology. In the mayoralty campaign which closed May 5th, the newspapers of Los Angeles stood as follows:

	Established	Circulation		Supported
Illustrated Daily News	1923	Daily	172,409	CRYER
		Sunday	157,011
Times	1881	Daily	131,413	BLEDSOE
		Sunday	187,466
Examiner	1904	Daily	167,707	Non Committal
		Sunday	383,179
Herald	1911	Daily	170,298	Non Committal
Express	1871	Daily	96,439	BLEDSOE
Record	1895	Daily	52,080	CRYER

All figures given, except for Record, are publishers' statements to the A.B.C.

The day following election when Cryer had been returned a victor, with 82,232 votes against 67,644 for Bledsoe, the winner issued the following public statement: "Los Angeles has served notice on private power monopolies and Mexican land speculators that she is for the Swing-Johnson bill and the all-American canal. She has served notice on propagandists that her character is not to be besmirched in the name of political expediency.

"Credit for the victory goes in large measure to the ILLUSTRATED DAILY NEWS and its unwavering support of the people's cause."

There is a reason for the confidence the public places in the ILLUSTRATED DAILY NEWS. It is a Vanderbilt Newspaper, founded on a high ideal, and has been made clean enough for every home. Vanderbilt Newspapers make no sex appeal and do not glorify crime. This is an established policy and not an occasional experiment. When the gates of the penitentiary closed on Kid McCoy he won four lines of valuable space in the Vanderbilt press and when the newspapers of the nation were giving columns daily to Dorothy Ellingson, the weakling jazz baby of the gutters of San Francisco, the same newspaper, including the San Francisco Illustrated Daily Herald, held the story to less than seven lines each day.

When you buy space in the Vanderbilt Newspapers you are making an investment in public confidence.

LORD LEVERHULME, SOAP KING, DEAD

British Captain of Industry and World Wide Advertiser Started Life As Soap Cutter—Elevated to Peerage in 1917

Lord Leverhulme, 74, British "Soap King" who became one of England's greatest industrial captains through world-wide advertising, died in London, May 7, of pneumonia. He was a former vice-president of the Sphinx Club, New York, and one of the founders of the Club's British counterpart.

LORD LEVERHULME

He was born in 1851 at Bolton, Lancashire, and in 1874 married Elizabeth Hulme, who died in 1913. They had one son. W. H. Lever, who is the only heir to his father's vast fortune.

The accumulation of this fortune began in an humble way. William Hasken Lever found his first job at 16 cutting and wrapping soap.

Soon he had a little factory of his own, and before many years had passed his wealth had grown to such proportions that it actually disturbed him. Part of it was spent in creating his model works and model town of Port Sunlight. With its quaint old English style houses, red tiled roofs and latticed windows, its gardens and tree-lined streets, Port Sunlight is one of the marvels of industrial England. The houses are rented to employees of the factory for $2 a month.

Lord Leverhulme was the first great British employer to introduce profit-sharing schemes and industrial co-partnership. He favored a six-hour working day for his employees, but never worked less than sixteen hours a day himself.

His factories and enterprises have followed the British flag over the earth, from Port Sunlight, his model English village, to the Congo, to China, South Africa, Australia, the United States and Switzerland.

Lord Leverhulme was elevated to the peerage in 1917, taking his own name combined with the maiden name of his wife.

ADVERTISING PIONEER DEAD

Israel S. Jonas One of First to Advocate Use of White Space

Israel S. Jones, a pioneer in newspaper advertising, died unexpectedly at his home in New York recently. He was sixty-two years old.

Mr. Jonas had been connected with the advertising departments of many of the country's largest business houses. He came to New York 40 years ago from Atlanta, where he was born. Before leaving Atlanta he was employed in the advertising department of the Johnson, Du Bose Company. Later he was employed in the Shepherd-Norwell department store and the A. E. Shoe Company, in Boston, after which he became an employe of R. H. Macy & Co., of New York. During the last few years he conducted his business from an office in his home.

He was one of the first advertising men to advocate large areas of white space in conjunction with a small amount of type matter.

ASSOCIATION CHIEFS

WILLIAM M. GLENN, editor of the Orlando (Fla.) Sentinel, president of the Associated Press Club of Florida and the Florida Press Association, has been a Florida editor since 1914, when, with W. C. Essington as co-partner he purchased the Sentinel.

WILLIAM M. GLENN

Just prior to that he had been a reporter on the staff of the Indianapolis Star, and had had dreams of becoming a celebrated cartoonist. His "greatest thrill," he says, was, when he was 16, a cartoon of his creation was published on the sport page of the old New York Globe.

In high school he was editor of the school paper, and, while at the University of Illinois, was staff cartoonist of the Daily Illini. In 1911 he was graduated from DePauw University, where he was editor of the college daily. At DePauw he became a charter member and first national president of Sigma Delta Chi, honorary journalistic fraternity.

Following graduation, he started work as a reporter on the staff of the Anderson (Ill.) Morning Herald. Before going to Florida, he was also connected with the Paxton (Ill.) Register and the Chicago Herald.

"Teddy" Bean Starts Her Own Syndicate in New York—La Cossitt Joins Haskin in Washington—New Authors on McClure List

THEODORA ("Teddy") BEAN, who recently resigned as editor of the Sunday Magazine of the New York Morning Telegraph, this week announced establishment of a syndicate of her own called the T-Bean Syndicate, with headquarters at 299 Madison avenue, New York. She was connected with the Morning Telegraph from 1917 to 1924.

Miss Bean has recruited her syndicate staff from former contributors to the Morning Telegraph. They include Martha Coman, formerly of the New York Herald; Benjamin De Casseres, author of "The Mirrors of New York"; Marion Ryan of London; Alice Rohe, former Rome correspondent for the United Press Associations; Baird Leonard, writer of "Mrs. Pepy's Diary" in Life; Maude A. Bentley, astrologist; Delight Evans, conductor of a movie column; and Susie Sexton, magazine writer.

Henry D. La Cossitt, formerly of St. Louis, has joined the staff of Frederick J. Haskin, Washington, D. C. At one time he was on the staff of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. He was graduated from the University of Missouri School of Journalism in 1923.

Alma and Paul Ellerbe are the latest authors to be added to the list of the McClure Newspaper Syndicate, New York. A series of illustrated page stories of love and adventure by them will start early in June.

"Dwig," creator of the "Schooldays," and "Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn" comics has gone to his summer camp at Green Lake, in the Adirondacks.

Segar's "Thimble Theater" is now appearing in a full Sunday page in colors, in addition to daily comic strip form.

Kathleen Norris, who writes a weekly article for the McClure Newspaper Syndicate, and who has spent the winter in New York, returned this week to her ranch at Saratoga, Cal.

Barbara Bayne, feature writer for the King Features Syndicate, New York, has written a new series called "Princes of Adventure" in 48 installments.

SEEK TO BREAK WILL

Cousins of J. C. Eastman Contest Chicago Journal Disposal

Seven first cousins of John C. Eastman, late owner and publisher of the Chicago Evening Journal, yesterday took initial steps to contest his will, which disposed of his newspaper and the entire remaining estate of three of his employes.

Attorneys Robt. F. Kolb and Herman Fisher appeared before Assistant Probate Judge Frederick W. Elliott when Mr. Eastman's will was brough up for admission to probate. They said they would institute action in behalf of the cousins to set aside the will.

Judge Elliott then transferred the entire proceedings to Judge Horner, who will hear the mater on May 20.

Under the probate law, if Mr. Eastman's will were set aside, his entire estate, real and personal, would go to nine first cousins, they being the nearest relatives he had when he died.

Mr. Eastman's will directed that his entire estate should be shared equally by W. Frank Dunn, O. L. Hall, and H. C. Deuter.

N. Y. WORLD SCORES BEAT

Balderston Gets Important British Secret Document

The New York World, Sunday, May 10, published exclusively the full text of a "secret memorandum," drafted by the British Foreign office for the guidance of the Cabinet.

This sensational beat was obtained for the World by John L. Balderston, chief London staff correspondent. The memorandum, according to Mr. Balderston, was intended as a basis for the determination of Great Britain's attitude toward the European problem.

Mr. Balderston did not disclose how he obtained his copy of the document. It was dated from the Foreign Office, Feb. 20, he claimed, and sent to members of the cabinet by Austen Chamberlain shortly afterwards.

Its publication by the World occasioned considerable comment throughout the week by the British press. No attempt was made to challenge its authenticity. Lieut. Commander J. R. Kenworthy gave notice May 12, he would query the Foreign Secretary in the House of Commons in regard to the "leak."

Mr. Balderston in a dispatch from London May 12 wrote:

"Fleet Street, which had been led to believe by official propaganda yesterday that the World merely reprinted a document already published in the Chicago Tribune, but not immediately available here, has now learned that everything published in the Tribune was reprinted in the London Morning Post, March 6 without arousing much comment, owing to the elimination from the summary of the most important points in Chamberlain's document and the failure to publish any of the text."

Mr. Balderston succeeded the late James M. Tuohy as chief of the World's London staff in January, 1923. He is a native of Philadelphia, and was for many years New York correspondent of the Philadelphia Record. At the outbreak of the war, he went to Europe as a free lance war correspondent, later representing the McClure Newspaper Syndicate in the war zone.

CHANGES ON NEW YORK NEWS

Temporary Appointments Follow Resignation of Payne, Managing Editor

Several staff changes, announced as temporary, this week followed the sudden resignation of Philip A. Payne as managing editor of the New York Daily News, and the promotion of Frank Hause from city editor to the position of acting chief editorial executive.

"It is the policy of the Chicago Tribune and the Daily News to give men in new positions a month's trial before making the appointments permanent," it was announced.

At present Jack Masters replaces Mr. Hause on the city desk, with Clifford Laube, formerly editor of the Brooklyn section assistant city editor. Sterling Noel, formerly Laube's assistant, has been promoted to editor of the section. Noel came to the News from the San Francisco Bulletin eight months ago. Gibbs Hauffman, for 5 years a member of the News staff, succeeds Noel. John W. B. Mitchell, former city editor of the Hudson Dispatch, has joined the staff.

Mr. Payne's resignation becomes effective June 15. He is now spending a month's vacation at Springfield, Maine.

N. Y. Ad Club to Elect May 26

Election of officers of the Advertising Club of New York will be held May 26. Two candidates are running for president. They are Robert Tinsman, president of the Federal Advertising Agency, choice of the Nominating Committee, and Charles C. Green, president of the Charles C. Green Agency, a strongly backed independent. Both tickets offer the same vice-president and directors, which are Gilbert Hodges, of the Munsey Company, vice-president; and Grover Whalen and H. H. Charles, directors.

Our Own World of Letters

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

AT a time when the other text columns are so filled with copy giving the wider aspects of American journalism it might be well to review somewhat in detail for the sake of a contrast a book dealing with British journalism. I have therefore selected "The London Times Under the Management of Moberly Bell," written by F. Harcourt Kitchin and imported for distribution in America by G. P. Putnam's Sons. From 1890 to 1908 Bell had the title of "Assistant Manager to the Governing Proprietor" of the Times. When Northcliffe purchased the Times, Bell immediately became the managing director—a position he held until he died in his editorial chair in April, 1911. During this period Mr. Kitchin also served the Times in so many capacities that he has been able to give a comprehensive view of that newspaper from a number of interesting angles.

The organization that produced the Times was most unique in its composition. It consisted of three distinct units. One unit owned the buildings in which the paper was edited and published; a second unit had a perpetual contract for the mechanical production of the paper; a third unit owned the Times as a newspaper and controlled the subsidiary publications. Unity was not always present in this trinity, which was held together by the thread of the Walter interests in all three units.

So long as the Times, as a newspaper, made money and could pay its rent for buildings and meet its obligations on its perpetual contract with the printing company this tri-party worked fairly well, but when deficits loomed up stockholders in the Times as a newspaper saw that they would be held liable for the printing contract and for the rent on buildings. Mr. Kitchin believes that the rental for buildings was fair but that the contract for printing was much too high due to the fact that modern labor-saving devices had not been installed in Printing House Square. Disgruntled stockholders in the Times as a newspaper took the matter to court with the result that the ownership eventually passed to Northcliffe.

Again the machinery for mechanical production was so poor that the Times had to be printed in two distinct parts—an inner and an outer section. The inner contained the latest and most important news while the outer was, as Mr. Kitchin says, a journalistic dust-bin into which was shoveled the held-over matter of yesterday. Doubtless it was this outer sheet that drew from Lord Northcliffe the remark, "The Times thinks that news, like wine, improves by keeping." Again the Times was hopelessly overset every day: it lacked a modern managing editor to apportion the various kinds of news to the space available.

Mr. Kitchin gives two reasons for the failure of the Times to maintain its position in competition with other London papers: first, the vicious plan of ownership which I have already mentioned; and secondly, the isolation of the Times from the developments that were constantly taking place in Fleet Street on the part of its contemporaries.

Mr. Kitchin lets slip a rather interesting side remark on page 68 when he says that the Times did not expand telegrams and cablegrams but merely elucidated them to make them more intelligible.

How the circulation of the Times dwindled and how advertisements left to go to other London newspapers are outlined by Mr. Kichin. The concluding sentences of Chapter VII thus set forth the situation:

> Their printing business employed a large staff of men who had grown grey in the Walter service. The introduction of linotype or monotype machines would have involved the dismissal of considerable numbers of these old servants. This is what actually happened after the Northcliffe purchase. The Walter business was a patriarchal business, and one can both appreciate and admire the reluctance of its proprietors to see it destroyed and its staff thinned by wholesale dismissals. In the end a Northcliffe reconstruction was more fatal in casualties to the men than would have been an earlier Walter reconstruction. As in so many other ways, the Walters were living in a world of the past and had not become conscious of the new harshly-competitive world which was surging around them.

A pivotal period in the Times under Bell is thus described:

> In 1897 it had become more than doubtful whether the Times under its outworn constitution would survive the century. In these desparate circumstances Moberly Bell entered into heroic partnership with Messrs. Hooper and Jackson, a firm of American book agents, who were destined to dominate for ten years the fortunes of the proudest newspaper in the world.

In other words, the Times was kept going from its profits from this American connection. In my opinion, Mr. Kitchin does scant justice to Horace Hooper, who brought about an affiliation between the Times and the Encyclopedia Britannica.

For the future historian of the British press the most valuable sections of the book are those dealing with how Lord Northcliffe obtained control of the Times. In these chapters Mr. Kitchin writes from first-hand knowledge and without his volume the story of the sale could not be constructed from existing documents which so cleverly conceal the interest of Northcliffe in the preliminary steps. Northcliffe, for example was able to get the Times in competition with another group headed by Godfrey Walter and Arthur Pearson, and in competition with still another group known as the German syndicate because he was able to deposit £320,000 to the credit of Moberly Bell. Money talks, even in an English court. The remarkable thing is that Northcliffe turned this large amount over to Bell so that it stood in Bell's own name and subject to his check. Of course he later transferred his legal interest to the Times Publishing Company, Ltd.—the company which today, with different share holders, owns the newspaper.

Of Lord Northcliffe, Kitchin says on page 262:

> And when at the summit of his career he bought The Times, and was filled with vague aspirations about making it the "best" paper in the world, he failed because he did not know what was "best" and would not be taught by those who did.

To supplement this quotation let me add two taken from the page following:

> There was this of merit about the later Walters—who in other respects let down the poor old Times so disastrously that they did understand its purpose far more clearly than ever did Lord Northcliffe, their technical and intellectual superior in other respects.
> The Times was a caste newspaper, and Lord Northcliffe did not belong to the caste.

The book, of course, centers around the brave struggle which Bell put up against heavy odds to keep the Times a going newspaper. Obviously, it sets him forth in rather glowing terms, although it frankly admits that he was known among some of his subordinates as "that beast, Bell." But doubtless those who used that epithet little knew how their chief was fighting to keep the Times from being sold to outside interests and how, after such action was necessary with his cooperation, he still continued to fight to preserve old traditions and died in his office chair—with apologies to American slang—with his boots still on

The chapter dealing with Northcliffe ought to be accepted with some reservation. With the very best of intentions it is hard to be fair to a man who "fires" you. To some extent it is equally true it is hard to be fair to the man who inspires you. But this is another story.

"The London Times Under the Management of Moberly Bell" was written by a member of the working press in London. More than any other book with which I am familiar it gives shop talk that can be accepted at its face value. For that reason the volume ought to be of intense interest to the readers of EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

The concluding chapter might well have included a paragraph or two about the present plan for the future control of the London Times. That plan, however, has been set forth in a little pamphlet which was issued by the London Times and which has already been mentioned in this department.

WHILE The Scholastic Editor is advertised as "a national journal devoted to the interests and problems of school publications" the May issue has several features of wider interest.

Willard Grosvenor Bleyer, head of the School of Journalism at the University of Wisconsin, for example, contributes a delightful chat about Horace Greeley, who is characterized as "America's greatest editorial leader." The article tells how Greeley aroused public opinion in the contest for the abolition of slavery. Fred C. Christopherson, managing editor of the Sioux Falls (S. D.) Press discusses the preparation of human interest stories. How the trick was turned in several instances is outlined somewhat in detail. An unsigned article suggests that the make-up man pyramid ads whenever possible. It reprints the advantages of this pyramid style of display as listed by H. Frank Smith in EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

FROM the Chicago Tribune comes the booklet "Editorials of 1924"—a sort of companion to the booklet of news stories published by the same newspaper and already mentioned in this department. In addition to the printed editorials the booklet contains a number of wordless editorials in the form of cartoons.

All the editorials in this booklet are worth careful perusal, but two deserve special mention because of their connection with newspaper problems and policies. Oue, "Rouge et Noir," discusses an editorial which appeared in a Chicago negro paper, the Defender. It seemed to infer that the darker races everywhere, including those in the United States, should look to bolshevism for deliverance. An epitome of this editorial will be found in this sentence which opens the second paragraph, "Let's reason together on that."

The second of these editorials, headed "O, See the Pretty Goldfish!" discusses publicity for income taxes. The position of the Chicago Tribune is thus outlined in the editorial:

> The Tribune was convinced that the law was wrong in principle, but the purpose was publicity, and until advised that full publicity is unlawful the Tribune will accept the situation and give such facts as are most interesting. Probably the most interesting fact would be the discovery that publicity was unlawful under a publicity law and that the whole effect was to expose a citizen only to the eyes of people who wanted to do something to him after finding out how much he was worth doing.

The booklet is published by the Service Bureau of the Chicago Tribune and may be obtained at the rate of five cents per copy.

NEWSPAPER workers will find "The Power of the Press," a story which Irvin S. Cobb contributes to Hearst's International-Cosmopolitan Magazine for June, a bully good yarn. The tale, while it prints in the background some newspaper philosophy of its author, is primarily the story of a boy who needed affection.

Another article in this same issue tells how Roy L. McCardell has won more than $30,000 in prize contests. To me the most interesting part of his article, however, is how McCardell came to New York from Birmingham, Ala., to work for Arthur Brisbane, "the boy editor of the Evening Sun."

In still another article George Ade for the first time—so he says—talks about himself in particular and about some of his Chicago newspaper contemporaries in general. Of his work as a columnist he says:

> In 1893 I was put in charge of a department called "Stories of the Streets and of the Town." I was not exactly a columnist. They were generous and let me have two columns on the editorial page. The task meant from 1200 to 2000 words a day. If the pictures provided by John McCutcheon could be made to enlarge obligingly, I would cheat a little on the text. In the next column to me were the "Sharps and Flats" of Eugene Field. He wrote one full column every day with a fine steel-pointed pen. The type was nonpareil and his average was 2700 words! He never solicited or accepted contributions—wrote everything himself. He was known the world over, but did not sign his stuff. He never referred to himself except by an occasional playful use of the editorial "we". He threw fire-crackers at the pompous millionaires and noisy politicians, but he always hid back of the fence.

THE election of Hindenburg as President of the German Republic has revived interest in the little book "Boche and Bolshevik" which reprinted the series of articles on that topic originally published in the Morning Post of London. The book is published by the Beckwith Company of New York.

OKLAHOMA EDITORS ELECT C. E. MUCHMORE

Editor, Ponca City News, Chosen President at Two-Day Annual Meet —Group to Fight Judge's Decision

Oklahoma newspaper publishers wound up two days of business sessions and recreation at the annual spring convention at Sulphur, May 8 and 9, with the election of Clyde E. Muchmore of the Ponca City News, president for the year and selection of Bristow for the next meeting.

Aside from the purely routine committee reports and formal business, the convention devoted much of its time to discusion of resolutions condemning District Judge George C. Crump of Wewoka who recently announced that he would refuse to approve any legal publication made in the Wewoka Capital-Democrat.

The resolution finally adopted by the Association recited that if Judge Crump's action was permitted to go unchallenged and no law enacted for the protection of all newspapers in the matter of legal notices and public printing, "newspapers in Oklahoma will be denied all legal privileges and will be forced to give up their missions."

The resolution promised backing for Grady L. Webster, publisher of the Capital-Democrat and strongly implied a statewide campaign before the next legislature's session, to obtain a protective law.

President E. A. Gaston recommended that the association pro-rate the cost of maintaining the unique Editors' Club at Medicine Park, among the members, the institution to be financed through the contribution of advertising space. This editors' home is the only institution of its kind in the country.

Mayor R. C. Green of Sulphur welcomed the association on the opening day and W. R. Martineau, editor of the Oklahoma City Livestock News responded.

Pleasure features included a strawberry festival staged by the state board of agriculture; a picnic at Turners Falls, and a motor trip on Sunday following the convention, to Devil's Den at Tishomingo, 60 miles distant.

Officers elected by the Association, in addition to President Muchmore, are: H. G. Spaulding of Shawnee, E. P. Martin, John Golobie of Guthrie and Miss Grace E. Ray of the Oklahoma School of Journalism, vice-presidents; N. A. Nichols of El Reno, secretary-treasurer, re-elected for a third term.

The new executive committee consists of W. F. Allen of Vinita, Jim Biggerstaff of Wagoner, Col. E. L. Gregory of Ardmore, Grady L. Webster of Wewoka, W. R. Martineau of Oklahoma City, T. W. Maher of El Reno, Hutton Bellah of Altus and C. M. Sarchet of Ponca City.

The El Reno American cup awarded to the Oklahoma paper with the best front page make-up, was awarded to the Fairfax Chief, published by Walter Eastman. The judges making the award were Walter M. Harrison, managing editor of the Oklahoma City Oklahoman-Times; C. M. Sarchet, and H. H. Herbert, director of the School of Journalism at Oklahoma University.

"FREE" FACE POWDER

Cincinnati Concern Trades $3 Box of Fluff for News Space in Dailies

Fallis, Inc., perfumers of Cincinnati, O., announce in circular mail addressed to newspaper "Beauty Editors" their entire willingness to send a $3 box of "Peter Pan" face powder for the use of the editoress, assuming her willingness to give that powder mention in the news columns.

Inclosed with the queer appeal is a facsimile letter from Priscilla Price, Boston Beauty Editor, saying that she got her three-dollar box safe and sound, gave the powder a handsome little write-up, worth $300 to any face-powder advertiser, and then naively remarked: "Perhaps you have some specialties that you would like to have me become acquainted with and bring to the attention of our 240,000 readers."

Dinner to Circulation Promoter

More than 1,200 people, mostly New York newspaper circulators and distributors, are expected to attend the testimonial dinner and dance to be given to Joseph Bavasi, New York circulation sales promoter, at the Hotel Pennsylvania, May 17.

MRS. "F. P. A."

Mrs. F. P. Adams

"THE loveliest bride I have ever seen" was the observation of Franklin Pierce Adams, conductor of the "Conning Tower" column in the New York World, about Esther Sales Root, whom he made Mrs. "F.P.A.," May 10, in New York. Mr. and Mrs. Adams sailed for abroad on the Mauretania, Tuesday of this week to spend a honeymoon in Italy.

The wedding ceremony, performed by Justice of the Peace Donlinger, was attended by many New York newspaper writers, authors, and artists. It was also distinguished as a "Lucy Stone" affair, as evidenced by the list of guests including:

Miss Edna St. Vincent Millay and Eugene Boissevain, Miss Ruth Hale, of the Brooklyn Eagle, and Heywood Broun, columnist of the World; Miss Neysa McMein and John Baragwanath; Miss Elinor Wylie and William Rose Benet; Miss Doris Stevens and Dudley Field Malone; Miss Mary Kennedy and Deems Taylor, music critic of the World; and Miss Gladys Bround and Arthur Davison Ficke.

Other guests included Herbert Bayard Swope, executive editor of the World, and Mrs. Swope; Ogden Reid, publisher of the New York Herald Tribune, and Mrs. Reid; Ring W. Lardner and Mrs. Lardner; Alexander Woollcott, dramatic critic, New York Sun; and Arthur Krock, assistant to the editor, and Rollin Kirby, staff cartoonist of the World.

Mrs. Adam's father is President of the United Publishers' Corporation. Her grandfather was George F. Root, who composed the immensely popular songs of the Civil War, "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp, the Boys are Marching," the "Battle Cry of Freedom," "Just Before the Battle, Mother," and "The Vacant Chair." She is herself a pianist of ability and has done some criticism on the New York Morning Telegraph, among other publications.

Mr. Adams has been doing "colyums" in New York for more than twenty years. In 1913 he ended a nine years' association with the Evening Mail, and was seven years on the Tribune before coming to the World, Jan. 1, 1922

When the couple sailed on their honeymoon, Mrs. Adams was one of the first members of the Lucy Stone League to use a passport issued to her under her maiden name of Esther Root.

Charles T. Buck

BOYS. That one word describes the chief hobby of Charles T. Buck, circulation manager of the Lancaster (Pa.) New Era, and 1925-26 president of the Interstate Circulation Managers' Association.

He considers them a circulation department's greatest asset and their efforts the best medium for obtaining subscribers. With five sons of his own passing through the usual stages of measles, mumps and broken bones, Mr. Buck manages to keep himself well employed. When he finds time hanging heavy on his hands, he helps civic leaders in their work among other boys.

Mr. Buck started his business life as a newsboy, and therefore boys in that employment interest him most. He was nine when he started, and while working completed his high school education.

Following graduation he became a collector for the Scranton Republican. It was the stepping stone to the position of branch manager for the Republican, later roadman, and eventually assistant circulation manager.

Circulation manager of the Chester Times was his next position, and from there he went to the Washington (D. C.) Herald in the same capacity. In Washington he introduced the silent street vendor system, increasing the Herald's circulation 8,000. When the Lancaster Examiner and New Era were consolidated, Mr. Buck took charge of the circulation department of the combined newspaper.

AGE BOWS TO YOUTH

Cox, 62, Voluntarily Gives Way to Younger Man in A. P. Bureau

Age voluntarily gave way to youth in the Associated Press this week.

E. J. Cox, 62, for 40 years in A. P. service, has spent the last 19 years as chief of the Baltimore bureau. Recently that bureau was enlarged, due to establishment of a Maryland state circuit.

Cox didn't want to leave the service. He felt, however, a younger man should have his job, in the interest of A. P. members.

"Please don't think I'm a quitter," he wrote to the New York office. "I can last but a comparatively few years longer, so that now seems to me to be the time to make a change."

He asked for the position of day filing editor in the Baltimore bureau. His wish was granted.

Ralph O. Brown, correspondent at Buffalo, was transferred to become Baltimore manager. Cox remains as day filing editor, with no reduction in pay.

In a personal letter, Kent Cooper, general manager, paid tribute to the faithful service of Cox.

Over the vast area of 36,354 square miles are scattered nearly three million people.

Thousands of these are living on prosperous farms, while ninety-two city centers (31 with population over 10,000 and 61 from 2,500 to 10,000), are claiming their share of the most prosperous classes known to the middle west—the middle west that enjoys genuine prosperity.

This state, eleventh in point of population, presents opportunities for successful advertising from toilet soaps to farm tractors.

Newspapers not only blanket the big city centers but their well developed circulation systems have placed them at the door of every farmhouse in the state.

NEWSPAPER MAKERS AT WORK

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

GEORGE LINDSAY: Many newspapers do not know production costs.

"ONE of the great and perilous demands of the day in the newspaper business is a proper and adequate accounting system," George Lindsay, publisher of the Marion (Ind.) Chronicle, and president of the Inland Daily Press Association declared in an interview this week.

"So many newspaper publishers, not all of them small, do not know the cost of production of an inch of advertising, the cost of production for a page, and they do not know what the proper distribution of these costs should be."

Mr. Lindsay does not make these assertions without knowledge and fact to back them up. The association which he heads developed a cost finding system, designed to reveal proper accounting methods. But, he said this week, out of 250 members, the Inland received only 70 reports for 1924.

"The reason was," he stated, "that a very large number of the papers did not have on hand figures on which repiles to our cost finding questionnaire could be based.

"The Inland Daily Press Association, however, will eventually establish an improved acounting system in the offices of all its members.

"A proper and adequate accounting system should embrace a classified collection of data on all separate sources of revenues and avenues of expense," Mr. Lindsay further explained. "This data should be so aranged that each year and each month may be compared with previous years and months."

In his own office, Mr. Lindsay has developed a very careful and accurate accounting system.

"We base the outlay allowed the different departments and also their income on the basis of figures collected during the past five years which may be modified somewhat by general business conditions.

"We assign the amount of business we expect from our advertising department, and give them a commission on all they exceed."

Mr. Lindsay after being interested in the work of the Inland and other regional press associations, has conceived the idea of organizing a national inter-regional council, for the purpose of co-operating on common problems.

In adition to his presidency of the Inland, where he is now serving his second term, he was in 1923-1924 president of the Indiana Editorial Asociation, and is the present president of the Indiana Daily Press Association. He does not, however, allow his association work to interfere with his interest in his own newspaper the Chronicle, the owner of which he has been since 1912.

On the Chronicle, Mr. Lindsay writes the daily editorials.

"We try to print two original editorials every day," he said. "One of them we base on a local problem, while the second is devoted to national or international questions. Believing that our readers appreciate the editorial thought of metropolitan editors, we also make a point of publishing two editorials daily from some larger newspaper."

Mr. Lindsay was asked his opinion on the present discussion regarding the printing of crime.

"A recital of crime events should be given in every newspaper," he replied, "but should not be elaborated upon.

The Leopold-Loeb case was an instance where the publication of crime news was carried to the point of nausea, and I trace the present reaction to that.

"Stories of crime, I believe, should be written with a view of warning against similar anti-social acts, rather than as alluring suggestions, flung out to hypnotize weak-minded people with sleeping criminal tendencies."

Mr. Lindsay is a graduate from the University of Worcester in Ohio with the class of 1885. Following graduation he read law in Pittsburgh and also studied theology there. He entered newspaper work from the law with his purchase of the Chronicle.

N. D. Papers Dwindle in 6 Years

According to a checkup by M. W. Brown, assistant professor of journalism at the North Dakota Agricultural College, North Dakota now has 231 newspapers, or 94 fewer than in 1919. All the suspended papers were weeklies except two afternoon dailies.

Pennsylvania

AN AGRICULTURAL STOREHOUSE

All know of the industrial supremacy of Pennsylvania, but few know the State as an agricultural storehouse of year after year wealth. There is little uncertainty of crops in Pennsylvania.

For years Pennsylvania has stood first in the production of buckwheat and among the leaders in hay, potatoes, rye, tobacco, wheat, oats, clover and barley.

Fruit is produced under favorable conditions and Pennsylvania stands second in number of bushels produced annually.

Pennsylvania excels in dairy and market garden produce and all the agricultural staples of the Northern States.

The farms in Pennsylvania number 202,000, averaging in size 87.3 acres and in amount of improved land 58.6 acres. Their value is given as averaging $8,551, the land being credited with $3,590 of the value.

The sheep on farms number 468,000, and the wool clip is approximately 3,500,000 pounds. Each year about 170,000 pounds of maple sugar and 100,000 gallons of syrup are made.

The numerous large cities of Pennsylvania make dairying a popular and profitable industry and the total yearly milk production from the State's dairy cows, which numbered 1,071,000 in 1922, is about 500,000,000 gallons.

Pennsylvania is a big State and the people talk big about their State. The advertiser who has something to offer will make the best impression if he makes his appeal in a big way in the only advertising media that are read by all Pennsylvania people—these daily newspapers:—

EDITOR SUSTAINED IN REFUSING TO REVEAL LETTER WRITER'S NAME

Maryland Court Dismisses Case Against Hamilton Owens of Baltimore Evening Sun—Act of 1896 is Cited

A LAW point important to newspapers was decided in favor of the Baltimore Evening Sun, published by the A. S. Abell Company, in the Circuit Court of Carroll county at Westminster this week.

The point involved the right of the State's Attorney and the Grand Jury of Carroll county to force Hamilton Owens, editor of the Evening Sun, to disclose the real name of a man who wrote a letter which was published in the paper and which was signed "A Daily Reader." When summoned before the Grand Jury and ordered to disclose the name, Mr. Owens refused to do so and was sustained by the Court. He based his refusal on two grounds:

First a state law which has been on the Maryland books since 1896 providing that no person connected with a newspaper can be compelled to disclose the source of "any news or information procured or obtained by him," that he cannot be compelled to give this "in any legal proceeding or trial or before any committee of the legislature or elsewhere."

Second that a line carried over "The Evening Sun Forum," in which the letters to the editor are printed, makes the statement that, while the writer of every letter must sign his name on it as a matter of good faith, the name will not be published if the writer desires that it be withheld. To give the name would be to break faith with the writer of the letter it was maintained. Mr. Owens was prepared to go to jail if necessary to avoid surrendering the name.

In this letter "A Daily Reader" made some comment on the enforcement of the national liquor laws in the county and said that on a certain day 15 persons were offered intoxicating liquor in a pool room in Westminster.

Theodore F. Brown, the State's Attorney of the county, in prosecuting the effort to force Mr. Owens to surrender the name, made a point of the fact that the letter dealt with law enforcement in the county.

He argued that the letter column of the newspaper did not come under the influence of the act in question, since it had not been procured by any reporter or part of the newsgathering organization of the paper. The "Forum," Mr. Brown maintained, was as separate and apart from the paper as if the matter printed in it had been printed in "a dodger" and distributed by itself.

Mr. Owens was put on the stand and was cross-examined as to whether the paper vouched for the veracity of the statements in the "Forum." Mr. Owens answered that undoubtedly many opinions which did not represent the opinions of the paper itself were expressed in all its columns. He was asked if a letter would be printed if the information contained therein were known to be false. He answered that of course that would not be done. The witness explained that such letters would be destroyed, said that a large percentage of the letters received each day were destroyed, that they were examined carefully as they reached the office by editors of the Evening Sun.

Charles McHenry Howard of the Baltimore law firm of Baetjer, Venable and Howard, defended Mr. Owens on the ground that the act of 1896 did unquestionably apply in this case, since the letter did constitute information received by one connected with the newspaper. He called the attention of the court to the fact that in Maryland and in other states a husband can not be compelled to testify against his wife nor a wife compelled to testify against her husband, to the fact that communications between lawyer and client are confidential. He said that in some states this principle had been extended to include the communications between physician and patient and between man or woman and his or her religious adviser.

To retain the validity of this law bearing on newspapers was extremely important in a Republican form of government, said Mr. Howard. He even argued that, with the development of civilization and the growth of large cities it would be difficult to continue such a form of government without this freedom of the press. The complexities of living in large communities made it difficult, he said for the great body of people to know of abuses in their government except through the press. Persons who had possession of information telling of such abuses would refrain from giving such information if they could be held individually accountable for what they said.

Mr. Howard asked State's Attorney Brown if, in maintaining that "The Forum" or letter column were as completely apart from the paper as if it were printed in a separate form, he also held that the newspaper was not responsible for the statements made in the letter column. Mr. Brown answered that he did take the ground that the paper was not responsible.

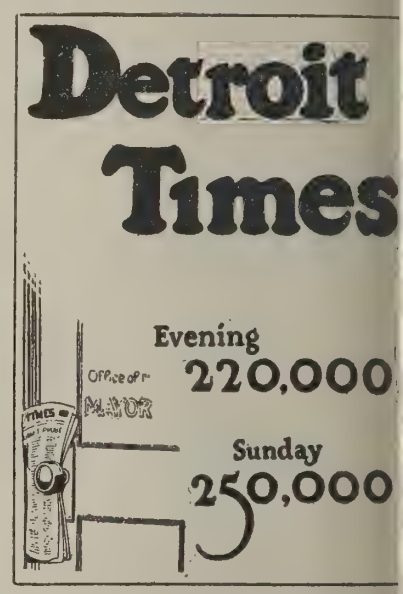
Mr. Howard, addressing the court, said the law had not been successfully challenged in the period of almost 30 years in which it had been on the Maryland statute books.

Judges F. Neal Parke and William Forsythe, Jr., sat in the case. In delivering the opinion, Judge Parke said:

"So far as the constitutionality of this question is concerned, it has been before us for a great number of years and has never been attacked as far as the court knows and it is disposed to pass that by as not having very much in it. It does seem that when a crime has been committed the hands of the Government should not be arrested in the investigation of that crime and the bringing of the perpetrator to justice. It is not for the court to pass upon the propriety of the newspaper officials in applying the privilege as they are entitled under the law to avail themselves of it if they so elect. . . .

"I suppose it would be extremely difficult for the court to attempt to define what is news as applied to a newspaper. It might be a matter of opinion held by one or more persons or it might be a matter of fact. It more frequently is a matter of fact because facts are generally of more interest than opinions, but certainly from time to time opinions become of news value when they are controversial in their character or affect any question of fact, which is a matter of public discussion or affects some public interest.

"News is comprehensive enough even in the court's judgement to include a section of the newspaper that embraces a statement of facts as of existing conditions with respect to the enforcement of public law. The writer did not express any opinion, but purported to know certain facts. Whether it finds its way into the Forum or whether it finds its way into the news columns, even on a different page, seems to us to be immaterial, because the test of it being news or not being news is the fact that it is published.



"It is their business to publish what is news, and they may well be credited with such expert knowledge as to give to this letter the prima-facie characteristic of news. It was certainly news which engaged the attention of the prosecutor of the county, who naturally and justifiably seeks to find out how the law is being violated; but he is thwarted here by the Legislature, and we cannot see how the official who received this communication for the newspaper can be compelled to disclose it.

"Here in this case it may have been considered by the Legislature that communications of this kind embodied in the public press may lead to the detection of crime and would be valuable to public officials in the discharge of their duties by bringing up matters which fear or desire to retain the good will of others would prevent a man from coming boldly in and stating."

The judge announced that he would dismiss the order on which Mr. Owens had been taken into court. He then ordered that the editor be discharged.

NEW ENGLAND

LEADS AGAIN

New England leads in many fields of enterprise as can be clearly seen by the remarkable showing made by New England Railroads during the first twelve weeks of the present year.

New England Railroads lead in the number of cars loaded.

The standing of the railroads is indicative of the general conditions existing in a territory. Busy railroads mean busy factories—busy factories mean busy people—busy people have money to spend.

Every enterprising National Advertiser is seeking the market that has money to spend—else his advertisements are as seed thrown upon rocky soil. Make your advertising expenditures pay princely dividends—by investing your money in space in this list of dailies that reach the people with money to spend.

PUBLIC'S OPINION ON CRIME NEWS SOUGHT

U. of Oregon School of Journalism Sending Out Questionnaires to 250 Representative Newspaper Readers

American newspapers are tending toward a more moderate handling of crime news, in the opinion of Eric W. Allen, dean of the department of journalism of the University of Oregon. Dean Allen, who has been making a study of the subject, says that there is a leaning toward the suppression of sordid crime details, such as have often stirred up public criticism.

"Crime news is not of social importance," Dean Allen said. "A large amount of space devoted to it is not socially advantageous. Such news makes a depressing newspaper and it gives a distorted view of a rather well advanced civilization. News of crime is monotonous, for the events chronicled have been happening for thousands of years."

A survey to get public opinion on the same subject is being made by the Oregon institution. A questionnaire, covering all angles of the subject, has been compiled and distributed to 250 newspaper readers, representing the widest possible range of professions, occupations and diverse types of minds. An analysis will be made later of the answers to the questionnaire, which reads:

Do you believe that the newspapers ought (a) to give considerable prominence to news of crime and punishment with a view to the deterrent effect of publicity, or ought they (b) to give very little prominence to such news on the theory that prominent crime news increases crime?

Whatever your belief on the first question, do you yourself read the crime news with interest? Which do you actually prefer to read, a paper like the Christian Science Monitor, which virtually ignores crime news, or a paper like the Chicago Tribune, which gives crime news emphatic display?

Apart from your own personal preferences, what preferences have you actually observed on the part of friends, associates and persons with whom you come in contact? In other words, do you believe your degree of interest in crime news is a representative one, or do you stand in a minority on this matter? How does the general public feel about crime news?

Do you want reports of crime suppressed in the papers you read?

Do you approve of the way crime news is handled by the papers?

Do you want reports of any types of crimes suppressed? Which ones?

Do you want classes of individuals protected in crime stories? If so, who?

Do you believe the publication of crime news, with proper handling of details and reports of convictions, tends to deter crime, or to raise moral standards? Does it deter prospective criminals?

Do you believe the publication of crime news, with proper handling of details and reports of conviction, tends to encourage crime, or to lower moral standards?

Do you believe the sensational paper's method of handling crime news tends to encourage or to discourage crime?

Do you believe it possible to report crime news in such a way as not to encourage acts on the part of certain types of readers?

Do you believe that the evil of whatever encouragement there may be to crime in the publication of crime news is counterbalanced by the good to society resulting from a full knowledge of the state of law enforcement as shown by publication of the news of crimes?

Do you believe that the bare essentials of crimes should be reported in the papers, without special effort to make this news attractive to the readers?

Where, in your opinion, should the line be drawn between crime news that should be printed and crime news that should be suppressed?

Do you believe that the publication of illustrations (halftones of men and women prominent in the case) in connection with crime has the effect of encouraging or lowering moral standards?

CINCINNATI DAILY TO BUILD

Plans for $3,000,000 Plant for Enquirer Approved

In a ten line Washington despatch under a one line head, the Cincinnati Enquirer announced the prospective erection of a 14-story building on the site of the present Enquirer plant on Vine street this week. The cost of the building is to be $3,000,000 and construction will commence about May 15 to 20 it is said.

The contract has been let to a Detroit firm of contractors and all plans have been approved by the court at Washington.

Edward B. McLean, owner of the Enquirer made a statement at Washington, D. C., that he had been contemplating the erection of a new building for some time. He said that the decision to build at once followed a conference with William F. Wiley, general manager of the Enquirer. The annoucement in the Enquirer modestly said that the District of Columbia Supreme Court had issued an order authorizing the American Security & Trust Company and Edward B. McLean, as trustee of the estate of John R. McLean to finance the construction of the building at a cost of $3,000,000.

The new building will occupy about 150-feet of frontage on Vine street and run back to College alley. The lower floors of the building will be used as a newspaper plant and the upper floors made available for lease to professional and business men. It is expected that the building will be completed by next winter and the regular editions of the Enquirer will be issued daily without interference by the construction of the new building.

"LIFER" FILES LIBEL SUIT

Prisoner Asks $5,000 Damages for Letter Printed by Daily

Suit for $5,000 against Alice Stone Blackwell, noted Boston woman suffrage leader, has been filed in Suffolk, Mass., county superior court by Jesse Pomeroy, "lifer," serving time in Massachusetts state prison, charging libel, as the result of a letter written by Miss Blackwell and printed in the Boston Herald March 23. Pomeroy has claimed the privilege of a trial by jury, and if it is granted it will be the first time he will have been outside the prison walls since he entered 50 years ago.

The letter in question told of the report that a kitten had been placed in Pomeroy's cell at one time, and that the prisoner had skinned the pet.

Recently a movement was started to pardon Pomeroy and the letter was written by Miss Blackwell in opposition to this.

NEW FRAUD-AD. ACT PASSED IN MICHIGAN

Makes Violator Liable to Jail Sentence of Ninety Days and Fine of $100—Old Law Being Tested

(Special to Editor & Publisher)

Lansing, Mich., May 11.—Conviction on a charge of violating the Michigan law against false and misleading advertising will lay the violator open to a jail sentence in the near future as the result of the passage at the legislative session just ended of a bill introduced by Rep. William B. Campbell, changing the old law.

Under the Campbell act, the judge may sentence a false advertiser to pay a fine of not more than $100 or to serve up to 90 days in the county jail or to suffer both penalties. The new measure in other respects is almost identical with the old law which has lately been invoked in a number of cases brought by advertising clubs throughout the state.

Prospect of a review of the law before the supreme court is seen in a recent decision by Judge Fred W. Brennan of the Genesee circuit court who, in reversing the decision of a lower court, declared the present Michigan act unconstitutional and insufficient. The judge said that the people might well appeal to the supreme court in the case in question in order to obtain a final decision in the matter. As far as can be learned here, however, an appeal has not yet been taken by the Genesee prosecutor.

The case which brought about the adverse decision was that in which Joseph Block, a Flint jeweler, was accused by the local advertising club of violating the law through displaying articles in his windows with placards attached which declared deposits had been paid on them but they had not been called for by purchasers. Four cards were chose examples by the advertising club w started proceedings and only one could be found. Block was convicte justice court and fined $50 but he appe to the circuit court where his convi was set aside by Judge Brennan.

It is said that the present Mich act is the same as that in use in a ber of other states where it is consid a model piece of anti-fraud legislati

EDITION TIME CHANGE EFFECTED IN BUFFALO

Agreement Between Local Dailies Governing Publication and Distribution Terminated—New Schedules in Operation

An agreement of several decades' duration governing edition releases of Buffalo newspapers and otherwise restricting publication was terminated this week. The Buffalo Evening News on Monday began the publication and distribution of its editions on a new schedule and automatically brought to an end the agreement, which had existed by the common consent of the publishers of that city.

The old arrangement provided for the release of editions of afternoon dailies at 11:30, 2:30 and 4:30 o'clock and provided that no front page changes should be made in any edition placed on sale at 4:30 o'clock or later. This arrangement resulted in the unusual spectacle of fleets of trucks filled with papers being held at the press rooms of Buffalo newspapers until the hour of release. It often happened that some of the trucks were thus held for 30 minutes after full.

The Evening News made a city wide survey at principal traffic points to determine the hour at which traffic was greatest and is basing its new press time schedule on this survey. An edition of the News carrying the full closing prices of the New York Stock Exchange now leaves the press room at 3:25 and another with full bond and curb quotations at 3:45.

Both the Evening News and the Buffalo Times simultaneously began publication of a late sports extra, on the streets at 7 o'clock. The Buffalo Star began releasing its first edition before 11 o'clock.

In commenting on the departure from the old customs M. A. Rose, managing editor of the Evening News, said:

"We believe a publisher should not dictate to the public at what hour it should purchase its newspapers. Consequently we have rearranged our editions so as to leave them on sale at times when they are in demand. It is now possible for us to have at every principal transfer point in Buffalo a complete stock edition at 4 o'clock, an hour earlier than they were available under the former plan. We shall be governed in the future publication of our editions solely by the Associated Press regulations."

The old final edition of the News is now split, the first run being called the Stocks and the second the Complete Financial. In addition the Sports and a Mail edition, published at 8:30, are being sold.

YELVERTON JOINS HOOVER

Former Consolidated Press Executive Now With Commerce Dept.

William E. Yelverton, formerly of the Consolidated Press Association, has joined the staff of Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce. Mr. Yelverton will devote himself especially to the development of the program for better wood utilization as a measure of conservation of our forest resources.

Mr. Yelverton was at different times superintendent of three divisions of the Consolidated Press in Washington, Chicago and New York, having joined that organization shortly after it was formed. Before that he was manager of the Harris-Ewing Photographic News Service, and prior to that was a Washington correspondent for southern newspapers.

Daily Backs Model Yacht Race

A miniature yacht race, for two years a successful stunt backed by the Los Angeles Evening Herald, will be held this year June 20. The race is held for boys under 20 with model sailing craft they have built themselves. The daily gains the interest of boy readers by publication of plans for the boat building, and by prizes offered to winners of the regatta.

Buys Into Cherokee Papers

J. M. McKiddy, managing editor of the Enid (Okla.) Daily News and editor of the Enid Eagle, has purchased an interest in the Cherokee Publishing Company and will become managing editor of the Cherokee (Okla.) Messenger and Republican.

Permanent roads are a good investment —not an expense

Now Is the Ideal Time to Build More Paved Highways

There is not a single community in the United States that does not need a greater mileage of permanently paved roads.

More than 17,000,000 motor vehicles are now using our highways for business and pleasure. They are packing the paved roads in already congested areas, as well as over-running regions until recently considered remote. And they are pounding to pieces all but permanent roads.

Even though a number of states have made good progress in building Concrete Roads, their present permanently improved mileage is entirely inadequate, as every motorist knows.

Meantime, while the building of permanent highways lags, the production of motor vehicles is at the rate of 4,000,000 a year!

Sooner or later this gap must be closed. Why wait?

Not in a long time have general conditions been so favorable for carrying on such public works as permanent highway building, thus assuring tax payers more for their money.

Now is the ideal time to extend both street and road programs!

THE newspaper management that understands the merchandising policy of its advertisers is certain to give maximum results. Know the men and women in local department stores who are buying merchandise and writing advertising copy. Have their full confidence. Gain this by true help and service. It is a policy which does not fail.

HERE is a tip for your circulation department. Have each carrier ascertain, if possible, the new address whenever anyone moves off his route, and to pass this information on to your department together with remarks as to whether the mover is a subscriber, "bad pay," or anything else that might be of advantage to the carrier into whose territory the move is made. It requires little trouble and provides real service.—B. A. T.

What food products are raised or manufactured in your town or immediate vicinity? Get hold of these people and get them to advertise under the heading of "Home Delicacies for Your Pantry." Quite a little advertising can be got from the small food manufacturers and garden men in this manner.—C. E. Pellissier, Boston.

This is the time of the year that furs are stored. Many department stores are putting in new storage plants and offering the plant for inspection for a certain number of days. These same stores also will advertise at this time setting forth the opportunity of having furs altered and repaired at this time. Worth looking up.—G. Smedal.

The Des Moines Register recently found a unique way in which to advertise the Nebbs family and the Register. Large capsules were obtained and in them was inserted a "prescription," which advised the reader to "Take every morning before breakfast." The capsules were distributed at civic club lunches, the chamber of commerce and other meetings.—E. R. Appel.

Municipal officials will be elected in many of the larger American cities this month. This means the addition of several thousand lines of business to newspapers that go after that copy. Assign a solicitor to see your city clerk for legal notices pertaining to the elections, especially the list of polling places. Candidates for municipal offices, too, will advertise. They usually contract for large space.—Joseph N. Medresch.

Now is the time of the year to get up a page or pages of advertising devoted to bathing suits and accessories. If your city has a community pool, it might be well to let this center around some activity of the pool, as was done recently in connection with a bathing beauty revue by the Shreveport (La.) Times. You should be able to get the department stores, clothing stores, and all active retailers of bathing goods to come in on such advertising. If you will arrange for pictures of some of the local girl celebrities in the aquatic art, your page will be more appealing.—A. W. Roe, New Orleans.

Wilmington Publisher Dead

Alfred R. Saylor, publisher of the Wilmington (Del.) Labor Herald, is dead at the age of 72. Death occurred in a Baltimore hospital, following a comparatively brief illness. A native of Pennsylvania, Mr. Saylor went to Wilmington about 30 years ago, as an advocate of the Single Tax, shortly thereafter establishing in Wilmington a weekly called Justice, printed in the interest of the Single Tax. When Justice ceased publication Mr. Saylor established the Labor Herald, which became the official paper of the Central Labor Union and affiliated bodies of Wilmington. Its publication is being continued by two of Mr. Saylor's sons, John C. Saylor, secretary of the Central Labor Union, editor, and Charles P. Saylor, business manager.

WHILE there is more or less agitation by women for the retention of their maiden names even though married, it may be found interesting to obtain opinions of local persons, both men and women, on the subject. The government does not recognize the maiden name of a married woman, but a little matter like the law can be overcome, some women hold. There is plenty of discussion rooted in this topic.—A. C. Regli, Eau Claire, Wis.

A reporter on the Albany (N. Y.) Evening News, having found that the equestrian statue of Gen. Phil Sheridan was slipping off its pedestal, has written a series of highly entertaining stories about the sayings and doings of the General's Club, supposedly of Civil War veterans, who at frequent intervals measure the distance that Sheridan's restive charger has gone toward eventual freedom and strive to compute the date when his next "ride" will begin. The idea is capable of local adaption and treated in the same original fashion, should make a hit anywhere. A cartoon is used to give added effectiveness as a feature.—A. S. B.

There is one United States Court that is little known to the general public and has a wealth of real news interest. It is the Customs Court where no person ever goes on trial, no jury is ever called and yet millions of dollars are often involved in its decisions. Such questions as: Is a lamb a sheep? When is an antique an antique? What is a toy? have to be answered and they are not as easy as they sound. Here is a chance for a story giving real information with a little touch of humor as well. Illustrations of such a court in action will help the story.—E. E. Pellissier, Boston, Mass.

A La Crosse, Wis., clothing firm recently received a letter and check for $45 from a man who said that 40 years ago, when he was a boy, he stole a pair of gloves, selling for $1, from the store. The check was to "make good" the loss. Practically every store manager has a story of this kind to relate. The conscience of persons who committed a misdeed many years ago moves them to pay for the theft in liberal amount. A number of lively human interest tales could be worked up by a reporter who will call around on a few store proprietors—A. C. Regli.

In every city, from the smallest to the largest, it is possible to find a large number of business houses being conducted by women. The Fall River Globe makes capital of this and is running a section headed "Successful Business Women of Fall River." It is surprising the number of different places being presided over by women, as we have found most every line from hemstitching to printing plants, under their direct control.—Fred J. Tarney, Fall River, Mass.

A Word of Four Letters Meaning

WEALTH

For NEW YORK STATE

NEW YORK—FIRST IN M-I-L-K PRODUCTION

New York State's dairy revenue is about $200,000,000 yearly. It produces most of the powdered cream, half of the powdered M-I-L-K and a quarter of the condensed and evaporated M-I-L-K in the United States. In New York State there are 1,678,000 dairy cows, of which 250,000 are under two years old. The average production of M-I-L-K per cow in a year is slightly over 5,000 pounds. The total yearly production of M-I-L-K is in excess of 7,173,000,000 pounds, of which about 6,148,000,000 pounds are sold.

Of the 190,000 farms in New York State, only 16% are without cows, 31% have only two cows apiece, while the remaining are classed as commercial dairies.

It is estimated that the farmers of the State receive annually about $104,000,000 for M-I-L-K and cream delivered at the plants, $19,000,000 for that delivered to dealers, and $6,000,000 for home-made butter.

The dairy plants, in turn, sold M-I-L-K products valued at wholesale at $169,000,000.

A territory that produces like this can consume equally well. This list of daily newspapers cover the state and produce results. Use them for results.

The New York Telegram
and* EVENING MAIL
73 Dey Street, New York

May 16, 1925.

Dear Mr. Advertiser:

I hope that you are watching with a degree of interest some of the things we are trying to do here on the Telegram-Mail.

We are trying, for instance, to give this paper a very strong home flavor. The great care and thought given each day to our Women's Pages, to our Home and Garden features, to our special articles by noted women writers, must of necessity have made some impress on you.

And the same thoughtful attention to the things in which men are interested can not wholly have escaped you. Our Market and Financial reports and news, our dramatic and musical criticisms, our editorial discussions of timely topics, our various special articles and our sporting pages, a great deal of careful thinking and planning has been builded into them.

We are trying to make the Telegram-Mail a family newspaper for those who wish to keep abreast of the day's news and at the same time have an hour's pleasant reading.

One of the pleasantest things in life is to watch a worth-while thing grow.

Yours very truly,

Letters from readers testify to the popularity of "Little Orphan Annie"

How They Like It . . . . . !

Jersey City:—I just had to write in regard to Little Orphan Annie. My little brothers like the strip very much and I myself turn to it the first thing whenever I get the paper. The boys do not want to see her leave the farm. It is so interesting. The scenes are so realistic it is really an education in pictures for the youngsters.

J. G. S.

Highland Park, Ill., April 21:—Permit me to express my appreciation for the work of Harold Gray. There's a bit of human kindness in his cartoons that warms the heart.

RALPH W. MARTIN.

Press dispatches from Los Angeles quote the head of a well known Motion Picture corporation as follows, "Every production of the future, to be successful, must possess a quality which can be described only as 'heart interest,' bringing a laugh one moment and a tear the next."

. . . the idea behind Little Orphan Annie.

Dear Editor:—Your story pictures are of the greatest pleasure to me, especially Orphan Annie.

I can't wait till morning to read Orphan Annie. She puts me in mind of myself. Always willing to help and above all good-natured.

Don't let little Cosmo, the Circus Clown, talk her out of Grunts as that "Little Pig" will mean the world to her some day.

Keep up your good work.

BIG-HEARTED ANNIE.

Chicago, April 14:—It is my desire to express to your Mr. Gray, through this column, the sincere thanks of a number of my fellow employes for that clever, clean, and natural character, Annie.

This sort of comic is educational in that it gives one a greater sense of appreciation for the natural aptitude of the average child and lends encouragement to the American parent in the rearing of real red-blooded boys and girls.

ELMER H. JOHNSON.
GEORGE C. MATSON.
HAROLD W. NOLAN.
VERA GALLETCH.
M. QUINLAN.
FLORENCE SCHULTE.

Dear Mr. Gray:—Would you mind telling a mere subscriber how you happen to know so much about an orphan's life and, too, the things on a farm that give children the most pleasure?

Of course, it's reasonable to suppose that you may have lived on a farm but you couldn't have been an orphan—that is, not a little girl orphan, anyway.

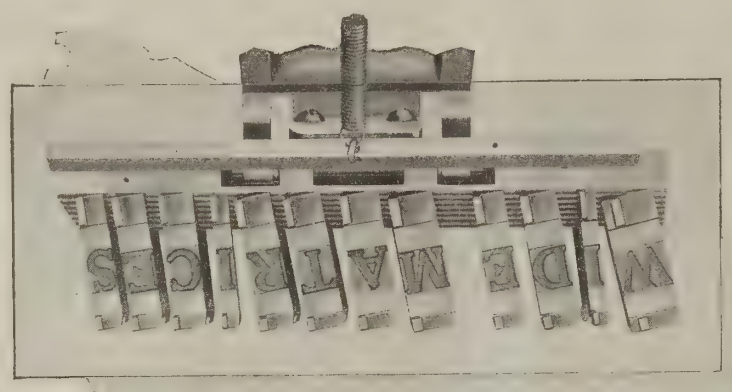
And you were so right in your incidents before Annie got away from the home. Too accurate sometimes—some of them brought a lump in the throat.

Finally, everyone loves Annie. Do keep her always young and happy and somehow reward the Silo folks for taking her in.

Many of us in the city love country life and plan to return to the farm some day. What a glorious thing it would be to buy a farm and adopt about four orphan Annies and Johnnies and spend one's life raising them.

Sincerely,
FLORENCE MORRISON.

That wistful, pathetically comic Little Orphan Annie has taken the country by storm. Probably no other comic strip has achieved such immediate and universal popularity. The letters on this page, reprinted from the Vox Pop columns of The Chicago Tribune and The New York News, reflect vividly the reaction of the American people to this intensely human and lovable little waif.



Give your readers a chance to enjoy this comic strip. It is sure to be an instantaneous hit. The Chicago Tribune Newspapers Syndicate is offering it to other newspapers only after proving its value in a phenomenally successful trial in The Chicago Tribune and The New York News. Your request for rates and proofs will bring an immediate reply.

An Exclusive Profit-Making Intertype Feature (Patented)

The practical economies of Intertype Wide-Tooth Matrices are obvious. The greater bearing area of the wide teeth makes the matrices last much longer. They hang perfectly vertical in the transfers and in the distributor, do not cramp or swing on the tooth bars, and drop straight from the distributor bar. A special bevel, made possible by the wide teeth, prevents any matrix from being caught by the next following matrix while dropping from the distributor bar.

In short, Intertype Wide-Tooth Matrices wear longer, forestall stops, keep upkeep down and put output up.

Woodbridge Advocates as Business Policy: "Organize, Work and Advertise!"

uccessful Career of New A. A. C. W. President Thrills Like Fiction—Wants All the Facts Regarding Club's Organization Before Announcing Policy—Budget Basis to Continue

By ARTHUR ROBB

O the old American formula for busiess success—"work like hell and ertise"—C. King Woodbridge adds little words—"and organize."

y his words can be judged the course will follow as president of the Asso- ed Advertising Clubs of the World, honors and obligations of which he eived at the Houston convention last ek. His convention labors ended, the w president—a giant physically—sat in room at the Rice Hotel, now with a e crooked over the back of a chair, w perched on the edge of his bed, and ed. Partly of himself, partly of what hopes to do as president, he talked, t the boiled-to-bone essence of our con- sation was this:

hat C. King Woodbridge has worked d on his every task—often from day- it to midnight.

hat he is a business man, trained to minute in modern big-scale methods production, management, and sales.

hat he believes a thoroughly organized is the only one that can be satisfac- ily executed.

hat his one mortal fear is that he n't finish a job he sets out for himself.

Woodbridge was born into the family a New Hampshire minister, but the ily moved to Iowa before young King s aware of the value of a New Eng- d nativity. Back East at the age of en, the family spent a brief period in w York and then returned to New gland. As a Massachusetts boy, Wood- dge did all of the New England boy ores and then a few more. He paid as went, by clearing sidewalks of snow, wing lawns, running errands, deliver- ir morning and evening newspapers, and, out the time he began to shave, he nd himself a drugstore clerk, with in- finite ideas about becoming a druggist. sire for further education sidetracked t ambition.

As a high school student, he spent urs after school and on holidays as a rkly, and his genius for organization gan to sprout. He founded a golf club al the 250 members he collected in a sall Massachusetts town elected him otain, but it soon developed that the ea was too big for the times—about 25 rs premature—and C. K. moved on to re fruitful endeavors.

Summer vacations brought him to Vine as a hotel waiter, and he hustled nself with little delay into the head- aiter's tuxedo, also an offer to join Jn Anderson as a partner in a now hly successful hotel venture in the uth. Woodbridge sometimes regrets en now that he didn't become an inn- eper, but then he wanted all the educa- n he could afford and all efforts were t on affording the best.

Like a good son of the White Moun- ns, he matriculated at Dartmouth, and, course, found a job. This time he ected the college bookstore at 10 cents hour. He owned half the bookstore the next year, and learned much about dits and collections chasing the ditor student's dollar before father's ck grew cold. Still, even with this, plus a job in the commissary, not to mention a healthy schedule of academic work, C. K. found reserve capacity. He hustled for a freshman editorship on the Dartmouth, weekly campus newspaper, made the grade, and as a junior, won the unprecedented election as its editor-in-chief. He also clerked in the Hanover Hotel and sufficiently distinguished himself in campus affairs to win election to a coveted senior society.

Part of the newspaper profits went to the editor, the hotel job helped much, the bookstore was a treasured asset—but Woodbridge was on the last lap for his degree and he played safe. His interest in the bookstore he sold, and Commencement Day saw all bills paid and $125 cash in his pockets.

Equipped with his diploma, a bicycle, and the cash, he shipped with a friend, who was later to be his brother-in-law, aboard a Liverpool cattle boat, biked across England and landed in Paris while the Boer War was the biggest news in the world. The travelers decided to "git fer home" before all trans-Atlantic shipping was diverted to South African transport service.

New York and an era of trial and error followed. An offer of $10 a week was turned down in favor of a $12 job in the advertising department of a farm machinery concern at Poughkeepsie. The work was interesting—it was the first and last direct connection of Woodbridge with the technical side of advertising—but it soon developed that all the firm's good billets belonged to "the family," and Woodbridge moved on to Brockton, Mass., and a stove works. Then he married and more money was needed.

He sought it by traveling up and down New England selling tea and coffee. Grocers setting out their stock before breakfast hours became used to seeing the young salesman swing down the street and into their doorways, departing a few minutes later with his order. The postman making his last collection at night found the big envelope containing the day's reports and orders atop the mailbox—or if he didn't find it, he was instructed to ring the Woodbridge doorbell and await the report's completion.

Woodbridge was a salesman and he knew it now. He made a direct mail campaign for a bigger job, and found it with the Loose Wiles Biscuit Company, then a Boston firm. J. L. Loose, president of the company, liked the young man's attack, made him special salesman and sales agent in New England, with the promise that "if he did as he was told, he would presently be sales manager at Boston."

A few years later, the company was reorganized and expanded, with a great factory and sales headquarters in New York, and George W. Hopkins, one of the pillars of the A. A. C. W., in New York, as vice-president. Hopkins spotted the New Englander from afar, called him to New York as sales manager, and Loose, then in the Far West, telegraphed a reminder of his old promise. Woodbridge lived up to his also.

Then a new and more difficult venture lured him and he spent 1917, 1918 and part of 1919 in Buffalo, marketing an oleomargarine imported from Holland. He succeeded in that, too, but in 1919 his old friend Hopkins, then vice-president of the Columbia Graphophone Company, again needed Woodbridge, this time to sell the Dictaphone. Woodbridge built up his sales organization and kept his product moving through all the financial troubles of the parent company, and when the bankers who obtained control of the organization decided to divorce the Dictaphone business from the talking-machine operations, Woodbridge was given the difficult assignment both of selling the product and finding a buyer for the factory and accounts.

Weeks of discreet inquiry among friends and business acquaintances finally brought him into direct contact with financial interests who were willing to back him, and in 1923 the machinery and Dictaphone business of the Columbia company were sold to Woodbridge and his associates for $1,150,000 cash. Woodbridge was elected president of the Dictaphone company and two subsidiary corporations. They found a plant, began operations, and, after paying an eight per cent deferred dividend on preferred stock, had money left over at the end of the first year. The second year was similarly satisfactory. The company employs 600 people in its Bridgeport factory and in branches in the principal cities of America, Europe and Australia. Employes are encouraged to buy stock in the company and now own about 40 per cent of the preferred issue. Esprit de corps is also fostered by service badges, which are awarded annually to men who have been employed for a year or longer.

Woodbridge has the reputation among his associates of devising more jobs to be done in a day than any man could do in a week, but the jobs get done. Every phase of the day's business is planned ahead and the calendars of executives and salesmen are laid out weeks and months in advance—and charted. The new A. A. C. W. president has strong faith in the value of charts that visualize the tasks to be done and the effort to be expended in doing them. His branch managers, when they are at their desks, have before them, under the glass top, the Woodbridge "why, where and when" sheet—the questions being, "Why is your business here?" "Where is it?" "When are you going to get it?" Their conferences and sales quotas are mapped before the force in plain view of all concerned

Woodbridge's desk is always clear now. He learned long ago by personal experience that the business of the minute is to be transacted this minute, either by himself or by another better equipped. His work is always "on the way," with nothing left for "tomorrow" or some other time more convenient than the present. Start something and finish it—that is the basis of his business philosophy, and he confesses to the mortal fear that he may not be able to finish the something that he has started. The fear has seldom been justified, he might add. His children, two girls, delight C. K. by exhibition of his talents in rising to the top of their groups, his younger daughter having just been elected head of her Girl Scout division, after the elder daughter had completed a distinguished school career.

Quite probably this buoyant tendency is inherited, for C. K. has exhibited it frequently in the past. He has been a director of the National Association of Office Appliance Manufacturers, a vice-president of the American Management Association, and is now president of the Dartmouth Alumni Association. And, by no means to be overlooked in this brief tale, he was president of the Advertising Club of New York for two terms.

His first undertaking in that post was an engineering survey of the club's activities. "You can't make an advertising club simply by feeding the members luncheon," he declared. "You will find one group of members interested in the daily luncheons, another in the social affairs of the club, others in various discussions of technical business phases."

The survey was plotted in simple block form, showing the organization of the club from its officers and directors down to every last group interest represented in the membership, and the secretary was instructed to provide a program that would fit the chart. Then new members were sought to make the charted activities function and (though Woodbridge takes no credit for this beyond the fact of his presidency) the advertising business of New York City was apportioned on military lines in divisions, companies, and squads; a man was placed in charge of each group, large and small, and assigned to enlist the prospects whose names and addresses were given him. It was a new idea in New York advertising club affairs, and no one who was acquainted with the New York fraternity two years ago needs to be told how thoroughly it did its job. The magnificent new clubhouse which was acquired under Woodbridge's administration is material and sufficient testimony.

Those are the ideas which will be applied, so far as they can apply, to the administration of A. A. C. W. affairs by President Woodbridge. He is not stating any policy now, for, as should be evident, he prefers to search out the fundamentals of his business before giving opinions.

One concrete plan that now has his favor is the preparation by A. A. C. W. headquarters of a textbook for the formation and organization of advertising clubs anywhere and everywhere.

"There are some basic principles that should be incorporated into every advertising club organization," he said, and it will be up to us to state them in the simplest possible form as we did in New York. With its units built on practically uniform structures, the Associated Advertising Clubs will be a homogeneous body and members of such a body can look forward to getting even more from the annual conventions than they can at present."

"We have an organization which has been functioning excellently under President Lou Holland, who has made great personal sacrifices to bring it to its present state," Mr. Woodbridge continued. "I intend to study the departmental organizations and to see wherein we can stimulate objectives for the whole body and for each of its parts. The budget basis of operations, which has left a yearly increasing balance on the association's books, will certainly be continued.

"I am convinced that it should be possible to create in the great majority of clubs throughout the country, circles, or groups, of like-minded individuals who want an opportunity to express themselves and to benefit by the expressions of others, and I shall make every effort to do so. When each individual feels that he is contributing something to his club and to the parent association, we shall have an organization that can be of great benefit to advertising, the people engaged in all advertising, and the entire public."

TO ALL YOU CUBS

To all you cubs who sit and ponder,
Who watch the City Desk and wonder,
Who spot your stars and count the hours
When you shall earn your praise in flowers,
A word with you; From one who knows
Your spirit's agonies, its throes
Its biting anguishes, its fear . . .
A word, a passing word, of cheer.

To all you cubs who stand the gaff
And sigh where you had thought to laugh!
To all you cubs who see your stuff
Manhandled, butchered, treated rough;
Who see inferior minds engaged
In slaughtering, while you stand enraged
And helpless, you must quaff the cup—
But here's a thought to buck you up:

That man who chews your choicest phrase
And murders it, he had his days
Of agony, tasted defeat
And grovelled at Gamaliel's feet!
Ay, Buddy, once he felt as you,
As in the dumps and quite as blue;
He in his time stood by and groaned,
And your same minor thoughts intoned.

So let that be your spirit's balm!
Stiffen your lip, Son, and be calm!
Rave not, that some inferior wight
Works havoc with the junk you write!
Some day, when you have run the gamut,
You may read copy, too; then, dammit,
You'll get your full revenge, I'll bet it,
As all these copy readers get it!

To all you cubs, these words, and may
You write and live to see the day
When you may edit junk, and mumble
Revenge upon all Cubs that grumble.

Charles King Woodbridge, newly elected president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, was the guest of honor at luncheon at the Advertising Club of New York, May 21.

Before introducing Mr. Woodbridge, H. H. Charles, club president, told briefly about his visit to the White House on the previous day when he went to call upon President Coolidge by appointment, to present him with his certificate of honorary membership in the New York Advertising Club. As Mr. Charles reported it, when the President accepted the beautifully embossed certificate he remarked:

"So, I'm an advertising man, now, am I?"

To which Charles is reported to have answered:

"You have always been one, sir."

The upshot of the visit was that President Coolidge authorized Mr. Charles to announce that he hoped to pay a personal visit to "my" club soon.

In introducing Mr. Woodbridge, President Charles read a letter from George Hopkins, chairman of the "On-to-Houston" committee, who told the details of Mr. Woodbridge's election in Houston, and following this Mr. Charles said that last year in London Mr. Woodbridge could have been elected to the office if he had wanted it.

Woodbridge, visibly moved at the heartiness and spontaneity of his welcome, rose to his feet and spoke with manifest feeling of the fine work that had been done for him in the preliminary campaign by several of his friends. He singled out for particular mention Gilbert T. Hodges, Frederic W. Hume, H. H. Charles, Harry Tipper, Clifton D. Jackson, A. G. MacKinnon, Elon Pratt, James Wright Brown of EDITOR & PUBLISHER, M. C. Robbins, W. H. Dodge and Hector Fuller.

Mr. Woodbridge went on to say that it was difficult for him to express what was in his heart over this "the greatest honor that has ever come to me." But, he declared, he found it also a great opportunity, as it was, also, a great responsibility to represent, in this new office, the New York Advertising Club, representative, as it was of the advertising thought and ideals of the world.

There were some questions about advertising, said Mr. Woodbridge, that cried aloud for answer, and yet no adequate answers were forthcoming. Business men, he said, want to know in dollars and cents just what advertising costs; how advertising men and how business men count the cost. He said that there were two questions that he wanted to put before every advertising club in the world for answer. The first is:

"What is the most interesting and serious problem that needs solution in advertising?" and "What is the most interesting truth about advertising for the general public to know about?" He declared that if an answer to those two questions could be presented before the convention at Philadelphia next year, they would be answers of tremendous benefit to the business world. In conclusion, he said:

"I take my election to the presidency of the A. A. C. W. not only a very great honor to myself personally, but a great honor to the New York Advertising Club, to which I belong. My job is a big one, but it cannot fail if I have the spirit of this great club back of me, and I want you all to take off your coats and help me put it over.

"And I want to repeat what I said at Houston when I accepted this great office.

"It's not what we get, it's what we give that brings us success in social, business or religious life. Let's learn to give the best that is in us; thus shall we insure success."

Mr. Woodbridge is sailing Saturday noon on the Leviathan for England and France, partly on business for the Dictaphone Company, of which he is president, but also to look after some contacts for the A. A. C. W. Thus have his new responsibilities begun.

SULLIVAN ON "HOW I BECAME A HUMORIST"

ubstitute for "F. P. A." of Conning Tower Fame, Pours Out His Soul in Confession—Only 32, "Without a Pain or An Ache"—Started on Saratoga Springs (N. Y.) Saratogian

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

RANK SULLIVAN adjusted the sharp point of a long silver paper tter to an envelope flap and drew it rough with a zipp.

Sullivan is a humorist on the staff of e New York World. Franklin Pierce lams, known to millions as "F. P. A.," nductor of the World's "Conning ower," was married the other day.

Herbert Bayard Swope, executive ed- r, wanted someone big enough to step to Adams' shoes. Sullivan is a small an with chorus girl feet, but——

Zipp went the paper cutter again.

Readers of the World were writing in mments on the Sullivan manner of nducting columns. Some were boosts d some were knocks. Most of the time e solemn eyes of Frank Sullivan showed int traces of twinkles in rhythm with slight upturning of lips.

Then came a moment when the sol- nnity and dignity were retained—a long mber moment. A Woolworth tower adow darkened his face.

"Oh!" he cried, "How sweet! How rfectly charming!"

Of course I asked him what it was all out.

"You see," he explained, "a dame has ritten me a poem."

Frank is only 32, a bachelor, "without pain or an ache," as they used to say. erhaps, I thought, the object is matri- ony—another sub for the "Conning ower."

"She writes," continued Sullivan, "and dare not repeat the rhyme, 'I think our column is terrible.'

I removed the paper cutter from Sul- van's reach. The window, with Park ow miles below, was fortunately closed.

"A hard blow, a hard blow indeed," I urmured. "But, Frank, you have only ourself to blame. Why did you be- ome a humorist?"

"It's a long, sad story," he replied. But if you can bear up under it, I will ell it to you."

With that, he unbuttoned his vest, an nvariable and interesting habit, dis- losed his purple and red suspenders over is broad expanse of blue soft shirt, and old the following tale:

"I was originally destined for the lergy. Being a younger son I had no hance of inheriting the family estates or itle, and according to the custom usually ollowed in the case of a younger son, was given my choice of either the clergy r the navy.

"But one day while playing golf with friend, a chicken happened to cross the oad near us. My friend said, 'Frank, I vonder why a chicken crosses a road?' Something stirred within me, and quick as a flash I answered, 'To get on the other side.'

"It came to me then that I had the makings of a humorist, and from that day on I wanted to be nothing but a humorist. You ask if I still entertain that desire. I consider that question unkind, and shall give you a poke in the jaw if it is re- peated.

"My parents were aghast. There had been a humorist in the family way back, a fellow named Sean O'Sullivan, and he had been hanged for a joke he played on a jewelry merchant. It was something about some diamonds that Sean pretended to filch from the jeweler, who had no sense of humor. I never knew the de- tails, for the matter was seldom discussed by the family.

"Mother and father coaxed, pleaded, cajoled and threatened. I persisted. I was not allowed to crack jokes in the house, so I used to go into the stable and read my stuff to the horses. Father put a stop to that after nine of his good two- year-olds had died laughing.

"I still persisted. I placed a tack on the teacher's chair. Old Mr. Frawley had a sense of humor. I will say that for him. Laughing heartily, he withdrew the tack, replaced it on the chair, and then made me sit on it.

"This was in Saratoga, N. Y., where our family estate was at the time. I left school and went to work for John K. Walbridge on the Saratogian. He and Howard Moody, my first city editor, al- ways told me I was a funny reporter. I would write funny stories about my fel- low townsmen and then they would chase me. In those days I thought nothing of running 12 or 13 miles a day.

"In 1914 I graduated from Cornell, which got quite a laugh from a lot of people. Later, in the army, my good humor never deserted me. I never could seem to shake it off. Toward the end of a long, wearisome hike I used to crack jokes for my buddies. Their lagging spirits would revive instantly, and shout- ing with merriment, they would fall out and start kicking me and things like that. It was all so wonderful.

"My success here in New York has been due wholly to hard, unceasing work, on the pre-Munsey Herald, the Sun and the World. Sometimes a tear comes to my eye as I think of my early days here. I would slave at the office to a late hour, writing funny stuff, which was often printed. Then I would rush home and snatch 40 winks of sleep, only to be up with the rooster for the second phase of my task. This consisted of opening the paper to the page on which my stuff ap- peared and then shouldering my way into a subway crowd. When surrounded by a sufficient audience, I would start reading my own stuff and then lapse into parox- ysms of mirth. Asked what the hell was the matter with me I would only shake helplessly with merriment and point to 'this fellow Sullivan's stuff.' In this way I built up quite a following.

"I shall not soon forget the day—I was working on the Sun at the time—when I donned a false mustache, trailed Herbert Bayard Swope and Ralph Pulitzer for blocks, and then at the opportune moment, got in front of them and started reading my own stuff, gasping with laughter as I read. Piqued with curiosity they of course investigated. I told them of 'this fellow Sullivan's stuff.' Piqued with more curiosity, they decided to look 'this fellow Sullivan' over. Whereupon I ran around the block, gave the false mustache to a little old apple woman who looked hungry, reappeared before Mr. Swope and Mr. Pulitzer, told them who I was, and got the job.

"Yes, I should say that I owe my suc- cess mainly to the fact that I had all my teeth out."

Frank Sullivan's paper cutter had opened many nice letters, too—letters which set him thinking over the news- paper career that had brought him after eleven years to a desk in "F. P. A.'s" auditorium.

Memories lead him back to Saratoga high school days.

"I always wanted to be a newspaper man," he recalled. "I never will be any- thing else, although I have a book or two in the back of my head, I hope some day to see neatly printed and bound. It's strange, too, since none of my family, as far as I know, were ever interested in newspaper work.

"In high school, I was one of those fellows who are 'good in English' and nothing much else. Once my fraternity gave a spread. I wrote it up and sent it to the Saratogian. When the editor used it, I definitely made up my mind I would be a newspaper man."

In high school, Sullivan had come very near to winning a State scholarship, which would have paid his tuition at Cornell. He was second best. The summer after graduation he went to work on the Sara- togian, expecting a newspaper office would be his only alma mater. Then a state official wrote him to say unof- ficially the scholarship winner had changed his mind, had decided not to go to college, and he was next in line.

When fall came, therefore, Sullivan set out for Ithaca with $35, his total sav- ings, in his pocket. No scholarship ar- rived, however, and after he had been at Cornell a short time, he saw the actual scholarship winner there, who had again changed his mind. Sullivan hadn't enough money to get home again, and decided to stay. He got work washing dishes in the Commons, and, with a little help from his brother the last two years, paid his own way to his diploma.

With the sheepskin won, he went back to the Saratogian, where, he says, he had "a swell time and swell training, covering police, the undertakers, real estate, and sports."

This training behind him, he went to New York and the New York Herald and then the Sun. In 1922, he succeeded Don Marquis as conductor of the "Sun Dial." Not long after occurred the "Michael Grayson" era in the history of the Sun "columning."

The story is not Sullivan's, but as told by others on Park Row it is that Mr. Munsey, when Don Marquis left him, be- came angry. He is quoted as having said in effect:

"I'll never make another man's reputa- tion in New York. Hereafter, the Sun Dial will be written under the non de plume of Michael Grayson."

Frank Sullivan wore the clothes of Michael Grayson for a while, and then resigned to join the World, where he has been ever since.

DAILY NOT HELD FOR REPORTER'S ERROR

Libel Suit Against Montreal La Patrie Dismissed—Court Holds Paper Not Liable for Writer's Mistake

Interesting comments on the functions of a newspaper, coupled with the consid- eration of the effect of unintentional errors in reporting, were made by Chief Justice Martin of the Superior Court of Quebec in addressing a jury in a libel action brought by a Montreal citizen, A. L. de Martigny, against La Patrie Pub- lishing Company. The plaintiff had al- leged that La Patrie had erroneously and maliciously published evidence about him in a recent probe of the police system in Montreal. Counsel for the newspaper pointed out that publication of the words in question had been purely an error on the part of the reporter and had been printed in good faith. Two days after they appeared the newspaper corrected the error and made a full retraction.

"The publication in a newspaper of an account of the proceedings at any public, open meeting or court siting is in the public interest" said the Chief Justice. "The interests of the public are above those of the individual and must be up- held provided that newspaper reports are accurate and impartial. A newspaper may publish the evidence given by a witness against an accused person, even if this may cause hardship later, provided the newspaper does so without any malice. A newspaper could hardly con- duct an inquiry of its own to see if each witness was telling the truth, but the law gives it the privilege of publish- ing what the witness says, provided they are his exact words.

"A newspaper report is considered as impartial as long as there is no presump- tion of malice and one cannot hold that a simple reporter's error is malice, when the general tendency of the article in question shows good faith. The privilege of publication disappears, however, when glaring errors are apparent and frequent.

"It is the duty of newspapers to pub- lish all that the law gives them the privilege to print because this is in the public interest. The reports, however, must be accurate. A report may be ac- curate without being set down in detail, as one cannot expect a newspaper report to be as accurate or as detailed as one taken by a stenographer."

The jury found that La Patrie was not at fault and dismissed the action with costs.

Advertiser Group Expanding

Thirty-seven new members have been added to the list of the Association of National Advertisers since last Novem- ber, Robert K. Leavitt, secretary, an- nounced this week. The A.N.A. member- ship now totals 328. The association's next annual convention will probably be held in Washington, D. C., in Novem- ber, Mr. Leavitt said. The association will celebrate the fifteenth anniversary of its organization in June. No special meeting will be held to mark the event.

NEWSPAPERS PUT OVER $2,000,000 RADIO SALE IN 11 DAYS FOR N. Y. STORE

Double Truck Smash in 15 Dailies Followed by Smaller Copy Sells More Than 20,000 Complete Sets for Gimbel Brothers

POWER of newspaper advertising to swamp a retail store with active buying customers was demonstrated in spectacular manner in New York during an eleven-day period ending May 16.

In that time, using newspaper space in mammoth scale, Gimbel Brothers department store cleared its shelves of nearly $2,000,000 worth of complete Freed-Eisemann radio sets at bargain prices.

More than 20,000 actual purchasers of radio sets were drawn to the store by a high power advertising campaign in 15 dailies—a campaign which contained all elements needed in the successful use of newspaper advertising columns.

Extraordinary preparations had been made to serve an expected influx of radio bargain customers, but the crush which followed appearance of the first special advertisement in the newspaper list May 4, was beyond all anticipation, Gimbel executives declared.

The advertising copy, a double truck spread, told the whole story of the Freed-Eisemann sales in a manner entirely impossible in any media other than newspapers. Throughout the 11 days in addition to the double truck, two full pages, and daily smaller advertisements were used.

The first message brought home in the circulation of 15 newspapers was that $1,000,000 worth of Freed-Eisemann (NR5) Neutrodyne five tube radio sets would go on sale the next morning on all ten floors of Gimbel Brothers, 32nd street and Broadway.

Big type informed readers of the bargain price—a complete radio set, ready for use, at $98.75, reduced from a regular list price of the outfit of more than $200.

An easy payment plan of $15 down at the time of purchase and the balance in monthly installments was also made clear in the copy's text, which showed prominently displayed other sale facts as follows:

A list of the parts the price included.

Special self-service arrangements for customers.

Center of the sale on the eighth floor.

Mail orders and telephone orders filled, with a special phone number given.

A special broadcasting program from the store's own radio station for demonstration purposes.

Choice of two loud speakers, and the fact that the store's radio shops would be open from 7 A. M. until midnight so that everybody could participate.

Text in smaller type between diagonal strips containing illustrations, on one side, of the store's eighth floor, which was to be devoted to the sale, and, on the other, separate drawings of each part included in the complete set, following a short paragraph lead announcing the bargain, was devoted to detailed arguments given as "overwhelming proof of Freed-Eisemann supremacy."

This text read in part:

"There have been big radio events before this. Some of them we've held here; some have been exploited elsewhere. But neither here, there nor elsewhere, has anything approaching this been exploited or considered. There are no two ways about that.

"There are 14 well-known manufacturers licensed to make Neutrodyne Receivers. The overwhelming proof of Freed-Eisemann supremacy is the fact that official figures show that for the year 1924 the sales of the Freed-Eisemann Company alone were more than half the combined total of the other 13 manufacturers put together."

(To illustrate this a circular chart was printed.)

Six days later full page space was used in the fifteen newspapers to announce that the original million-dollar shipment of sets had been exhausted, and hundreds of prospective customers had been turned away.

"To fill this need," the copy of this advertisement read, "the Freed-Eisemann Radio Corporation has consented to deliver 10,000 more sets. Some of them have already arrived. And the world's greatest radio sale begins all over again tomorrow."

Evening newspapers on the Gimbel list May 15, and morning newspapers of May 16 announced the last day of the eleven-day sale in full page space, which contained, in addition to sales arguments, information, and illustrations, the following text:

"Tomorrow—Saturday—at 9 P. M. marks the dramatic close of the most sensational sale the world has ever witnessed. A sale that has been attended by thousands of people, not only from New York, but from many States. A sale that, in actual figure, involved the passing from Gimbel's into the homes of the public of $2,000,000 worth of radio receiving sets. Freed-Eisemann NR5 sets—world famous for their satisfactory and continuous performance. This sale will go down into history. Never before has anything of such a gigantic scale been attempted by any retail radio organization. It indeed is an achievement. An achievement of which we are justly proud. Of which New York may well be proud. And America. And the world. Merit alone accomplished this. Merit, backed by the integrity of one of America's largest retail organizations—Gimbel Brothers."

The list of newspapers, whose advertising columns drew more than 20,000 people with $2,000,000 to spend to the Gimbel radio sale, follows:

New York American, New York Herald Tribune, New York Mirror, New York News, New York Times, New York World, New York Journal, New York Sun, New York Telegram, New York Evening World, Courier des Etats Unis, Jewish Forward, New Yorker Staats-Herold, and the Newark News.

The preparations within the store to meet the throng of customers drawn there by these dailies were described for EDITOR & PUBLISHER by a Gimbel executive.

"We arranged that the sale would be accomplished on a virtual self-service plan," he said. "Although concentrated on the eighth floor, we had special counters on all ten floors. On the eighth floor we constructed for the sale two tables 300 feet long, and two about 175 feet long. At intervals along these tables were demonstration booths.

"For those wishing to buy on the installment plan, we had bill of sales printed beforehand, so made out that the purchaser's signature was all that was necessary.

"After signing the bill of sale and presenting $15 to a clerk, a customer was handed a package of five tubes. Delivery of the complete set was subject to the approval of the credit department of the store. There were two reasons for presenting the five tubes at the time of purchase; first, to prevent breakage in delivery, and secondly, because the $15 represented the retail value of the tubes.

"We arranged separate booths for cash customers, where sets were all wrapped up, ready to be carried away or for immediate delivery.

"Altogether this sale has been one of the most successful in our history."

JOURNALISM SCHOOL SAVED

U. of Texas Board of Regents Approves Use of Emergency Funds

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

AUSTIN, Tex., May 20.—The School of Journalism of the University of Texas was given a temporary respite by the board of regents in session at Galveston, Tuesday, from the second near-fatal swat from the Ferguson family in nine years.

Gov. Miriam A. Ferguson having vetoed all its appropriation last month, as her husband did when governor, the regents voted to continue the journalism courses until present students graduate. It is believed certain that the school will be restored by the next legislature, two years from now. A petition from all journalism students, and nearly 40,000 other students and faculty members asking that the school be saved was read before the regents.

Young people may be foolish, but they were not the ones who got the world into this fix.—New York Telegram.

CURTIS TABLOID LAUNCHED IN PHILADELPHIA

Morning Sun Appears as North American Is Merged with the Public Ledger—Conservative In Appearance—Carries A. P. Reports—N. A. Staff Members Make Other Connections

(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

PHILADELPHIA, May 20.—After its last edition went to press last Saturday night the Philadelphia North American, the oldest daily newspaper in America, ceased to exist as a separate entity and on Tuesday Philadelphia witnessed the birth of The Illustrated Sun, a neat tabloid six-day morning daily, possessed of the North American's Associated Press membership.

Coincidentally the Curtis morning paper appeared with this new title: Public Ledger and North American, both on the first page and at the top of the first page of the business section.

The sale of the North American to Cyrus H. K. Curtis, announced in last week's EDITOR & PUBLISHER, was a distinct surprise to every person actively associated with the publication until within 24 hours before the deal was formally put through and was one of the biggest events in journalism in this city in many years. It was followed by a lively scramble among local newspapers to obtain North American staff men and features.

Employes of the North American were notified just three days in advance that they would be retained on the staff only until the last issue went to press on Saturday night. They received the legal two-weeks' pay from the Wanamaker estate, the seller.

E. A. Van Valkenburg, from his home at Wellsboro, Pa., this week indignantly denied a report that he had been associated in the sale and had had previous knowledge of the transaction.

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER he made the following statement:

"It is rough on me to have it appear that I not only knew in advance of this transaction, which destroyed the North American, but was actually a party to it. I had not the slightest advance knowledge of it and the fact is I had done everything in my power to perpetuate and preserve the North American. I ended my connection with the paper six months ago, but my affection for and belief in the newspaper did not end and my deepest concern was for a faithful and able staff, my associates and friends in instances for more than a quarter of a century. I had advised them all to stick together and fight it out to victory. I resigned from the North American effective Nov. 13, 1924, disposed of my stock holdings the following month, and left Philadelphia permanently April 21, 1925. Please make it crystal clear to the newspaper craft that I had nothing to do with the sale of the North American and deplore it."

The Philadelphia Inquirer sought to get the North American circulation, especially out-of-town, where it had been especially strong. It took over James L. Farley, the North American circulation manager, all of his roadmen and his entire staff of solicitors. They were given carte blanche to visit every North American subscriber and if possible to transform him into an Inquirer reader.

The Inquirer also took over Mrs. Anna B. Scott, nationally known for her "Market Basket" and cooking recipes and is featuring her. It got also James C. Isaminger, well-known sporting authority, whose "Sportlight" has been a North American feature for many years. It added to its feature service Collyer's Racing Comment.

It went after all of the North American correspondents in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Delaware. Then it announced the addition of two pages to carry news covering this territory, where the North American was unusually strong.

The Public Ledger announced in its editorial page that North American subscribers would be served with the Public Ledger and North American. The Inquirer sent personal letters and representatives to North American subscribers and offered the Inquirer service. The Philadelphia Record, the only other morning daily, announced its "bulldog" sales had "doubled" on the first night the North American had not made its regular appearance.

The same condition regarding the circulation battle exists in the advertising field. The Inquirer took over several North American solicitors. The Evening Bulletin got a few.

In the editorial department, these changes have occurred: Charles N. Christman, former city editor of the North American, went to the Evening Bulletin. J. St. George Joyce, Jr., assistant city editor, went also to the Bulletin, as did Fred C. Shanfelter, night city editor. Charles R. Martin, who "made up" the North American news section, went to the Sun, the new tabloid publication issued, beginning last Tuesday, by the Public Ledger.

Ross Kauffman, assistant sports editor, went to the Evening Bulletin. Paul Gottlieb, political editor, went to the Evening News, another daily tabloid, where he became assistant to the publisher, Lee Elmaker, former secretary to Congressman Vare, who is credited with a majority ownership of the News.

Louis Wilgarde, reporter, went to the Sun. Louis R. Winter and James F. McGovern, reporters, went to the Evening Bulletin. Paul Warner, who was the North American telegraph editor, went to the copy desk of the Inquirer. J. M. Combs, "slot man" at the North American, is on the Sun staff, as also is Harold Somerville, copy reader.

The Public Ledger took over the Edgar A. Guest daily poem and the "Confessions of a Wife" feature, together with an illustrated fashion feature. The Spelling Bee, which the North American had built up until, it was claimed, 387,000 school children were spelling in 8,062 schools in Pennsylvania and New Jersey, was discontinued.

At the Public Ledger office it was stated that the circulation consolidation was entirely satisfactory to the management of that newspaper and that all the features and staff members of the North American that were desired for the Public Ledger, the Evening Ledger and the Sun were retained.

Just after the North American "sent away" its last edition last Sunday morning, the entire staff went to the Elks' Home, where they were guests of Charles Grakelow, grand exalted ruler of the Elks and Director of Welfare in Mayor Kendrick's cabinet. On Sunday morning there appeared on the first page of the North American, this farewell:

With this issue of The North American, the oldest daily newspaper in America ceases as a distinctive factor in the journalism of Philadelphia. After this date it will be merged, by purchase, with another journal, and if it follows the usual course of newspaper history even its name will soon disappear. The management which has been directing this newspaper for the last six months wishes to express its deep appreciation of the loyal support of the hundreds of thousands of readers, who have shown their steadfast approval of the paper's endeavor to keep its news clean and honest, its editorials fair and fearless, and a genuine desire to protect the public interest wherever threatened.

To this we add our thanks to the hundreds of loyal employes, many of whom have given the best years of their lives to the upbuilding of the paper, and all of whom contributed to its character and growth. To these, now about to be scattered after years of pleasant and even affectionate association go hopes for peace and prosperity in whatever walks they may find themselves.

THE NORTH AMERICAN COMPANY.

Near this announcement, on the same page, was this:

ANNOUNCEMENT

With the issue of today The North American ceases publication as a separate newspaper, and beginning tomorrow, Monday, it will be consolidated with The Public Ledger. The combined editon will be published daily and Sunday and will contain all the best features of The Public Ledger and The North American.

All mail subscribers of The North American will be served with the combination Public Ledger and North American at the same rates until the expiration of their subscriptions, and all subscribers who have any other contracts, whether the paper is delivered by mail or carrier, will be served with the combined Public Ledger and North American until their contracts have been fulfilled.

Commencing next Tuesday, The Public Ledger Company will publish for general sale and distribution every weekday morning a tabloid illustrated newspaper to be called The Sun. It will have a complete news report, with Associated Press dispatches, and will include many features with wide popular appeal.

The Illustrated Sun, published by the Public Ledger Company, saluted Philadelphia newspaper readers with the following first-page statement:

GOOD MORNING PEOPLE!

The Sun's Good Morning to Philadelphia and the world in general is a promise that it will resolutely try to deserve its name. It will toil to shine cheerfully and to make all things of importance brightly visible. It will be guided by a great ambition to be cheering—even on rainy days, when it must shine alone. Yet nothing of interest or significance will ever escape its penetrating rays. The Sun's news will be ably condensed from its own full Associated Press Service and the work of its own news staffs. Its photographic cameras will be everywhere taking pictures for its readers. It hopes—no, it intends—to have the best news picture pages in the world.

The Sun, as you can see, now that it is in your hand, is designed to be a paper for busy men and women who may find pleasure or benefit, or both, in a swift survey of the world's doings every morning. Briefly and briskly it will tell all the facts and leave out as much of the writing as can be spared.

To all readers and all advertisers The Sun states its case in a word by saying that it wishes greatly to be welcomed and is aware, at the same time, that if a welcome is to mean anything it must be deserved.

EDITOR OF THE SUN.

It is a thirty-two page half-size paper, in conservative tone, as tabloids go, and with a distinct news policy, many brief items in neat make-up. Its slogan is: "A compact newspaper for busy people." Few stories were carried to half-column length, and the average length of story probably would not exceed two sticks. There is liberal display of news pictures, with a double truck of such art in the center fold, and a full page of sport pictures in the sporting department. There are four comic strips, scattered through the pages, and a run of small features, with a page given to a serial story. There are numerous small cuts to illustrate stories, a financial page and a page given to radio and vital statistics.

The paper was handsomely patronized by advertisers in its first numbers.

The mast-head gives the following personnel: Cyrus H. K. Curtis, president; John C. Martin, vice-president and treasurer; Charles A. Taylor, secretary; David E. Smiley, editor-in-chief.

The Sun is being produced in the Public Ledger office by the same staff that gets out the Public Ledger. The only changes have been the addition of several editorial workers who went to the Sun from the North American.

The Philadelphia Record protested against the sale of the North American in an editorial headed, "An Independent Voice Stifled." In part, the editorial read: "We may say with entire candor that we do not believe the destruction of any effective instrument of service to the people against predatory politics to be a wholesome achievement from the standpoint of the public interests. When a voice of protest is gagged; when, by any means, a spokesman of the independent press is muzzled, a blow is struck at the general welfare which may not be felt at the time, but which sooner or later is bound to have its evil consequences.

"Attempts at monopolizing the expression of public opinion, whether or not commercially profitable, are inimical to the development of those special virtues on which this Republic is founded. Even those who did not agree politically with the North American will regret its passing on the broad grounds that we have attempted here to set forth. Philadelphians and Pennsylvanians have lost a spokesman who may not always have been right, but who, at least, was always able, honest and earnest."

Frank P. MacLennan Married

Frank P. MacLennan, editor and publisher of the Topeka State Journal, and Mrs. Madge Overstreet Wright, of Kansas City, Mo., were married May 18, at the Westport Avenue Presbyterian Church in Kansas City. Mr. and Mrs. MacLennan will go to Asheville, N. C., for their honeymoon, returning to Topeka, June 1. Mr. MacLennan had been a widower several years. He and his daughter, Miss Mary MacLennan recently returned from a trip to Egypt and the near East.

Right to "Neutrodyne" Established

Unauthorized use of the trade mark "neutrodyne" was denounced by Presiding Justice George W. Simpson, of the New York Commercial Frauds Court, recently in a test case brought by the American Fair Trade League. In holding the defendant, the Greater Atlantic and Pacific Radio Company, Inc., for trial in the Court of Special Sessions, Magistrate Simpson declared that the term neutrodyne belongs exclusively to Louis A. Hazeltine and may be used only by him and by the licensees of the Independent Radio Manufacturers, Inc., under the Hazeltine patents and trade marks.

F. J. Wolf Joins Denver Company

Frank J. Wolf, of Denver, has taken over the interests of Victor Neuhaus, pioneer Denver publisher of foreign language newspapers, in the Colorado Herald Publishing Company and has moved to a new $40,000 plant at 1950 Curtis street, Denver, where he will continue publishing the Colorado Herald, Denver Jewish News, Motion Picture Weekly, Community Herald, Colorado Labor Advocate, Denver Jobber and several other semi-weekly, weekly and monthly publications.

HEARST RECOMMENDS PROMOTION FUND FOR EVERY NEWSPAPER

Says Consistent Conscientious Attention Should Be Paid To Building Up Reputation And General Prestige As a Basic Policy

EVERY newspaper should have a definite fund for promotion, and the most important thing for which this fund can be spent is developing general reputation and prestige, according to William Randolph Hearst.

Mr. Hearst's ideas upon this subject were recently told at length in an article on "The Importance of Good Promotion," written by him for Exchanges, a private memorandum for Hearst executives. With Mr. Hearst's permission, EDITOR & PUBLISHER herewith reproduces the article in full:

"It is a most singular thing that newspaper men do not believe in promotion, although it is the commodity they deal in. When they promote at all, they generally promote badly, hurriedly, carelessly, thoughtlessly. They do not give promotion the consistent and conscientious attention that such an important thing requires.

"I consider promotion so important that if any of our papers were going to buy six features and not promote them, I would advise that we should buy three and spend the remainder of our money promoting those three. I am sure we would by so doing accomplish more both in circulation and prestige.

"To paraphrase the old Southern Colonel's opinion of whisky—all promotion is good, but some promotion is better than others.

"Good promotion is promotion intelligently adapted to the definite object you wish to achieve.

"There are several things which newspapers should achieve. First, and most important, are general reputation and prestige.

"Very seldom does our promotion aim at this; and yet it is the thing which a newspaper needs most and the thing that is most valuable to any newspaper.

"I don't think we could accomplish the most by a campaign for general reputation and prestige. It would be too general to be interesting. But we should always have that object in mind in our promotion.

"We usually advertise some sensational subject that we think will be good for immediate circulation. The result is that people who don't read our paper see only promotional references to sensations and, consequently, may be disposed to consider our papers sensational. Thus we are interfering with our growth in many quarters, as well as injuring our general reputation, because a lot of people refuse to take a paper they think sensational. Such promotion causes even our own readers to regard the paper with less pride and approval than they should, and our own readers are not provided with talking points with which to discuss their paper.

"Considering the requirements of our situation, I would like to make a definite rule that nothing is to be advertised regarding our papers that is not positively creditable—not merely negatively creditable, but positively creditable.

"I would like our promotion to pick out the dignified and important things, and the inspirational things in our newspapers, and advertise them widely and persistently.

"These will bring just about as much circulation as the sensational things, as it is mainly the promotion which brings circulation. People buy the paper to see what all the publicity is about, if the promotion is persistent enough.

"But, promotion of the important and inspirational things will do something even more valuable than getting some immediate circulation. It will smooth the way and grade the path for future growth. It will remove prejudices which are obstacles to growth. It will make the best people want to take the paper and think they ought to take the paper on account of its worth. It will give our own readers pride in the paper and opportunity to praise it—and our own readers are our best salesmen. Many people have the wrong impression of our papers, not because of what we publish in them, but because of what we publish about them.

"Our business is to make these other people have the right impression. We should absolutely cease advertising the sensational things, which give them the wrong impression and advertise the creditable things which give them the right impression.

"Finally, we must and shall set aside a certain percentage of our gross income for promotion; and nothing should interfere with that promotion fund. Every paper should establish, after consultation with the executive committee, that percentage of receipts for itself and then proceed to expend it with the utmost care and thought.

"I would like to have every publisher present a statement at the end of each quarter setting forth how he had spent his appropriation and what the results were, as far as he could determine them. I think there should be some award to the paper that makes the best promotional record during the year and that the decision on this important question should be made by vote at the annual conference."

KELLY TO JOIN A. N. P. A.?

Kellogg, Labor Chairman, Denies He Will Resign at This Time

Harvey J. Kelly has been appointed chairman of the special standing committee (on labor affairs) of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, a dispatch from Spokane stated this week, adding that Mr. Kelly would remain as manager of the Pacific Northwest Newspaper Publishers' Association until his successor is appointed.

H. N. Kellogg, for many years chairman of the A. N. P. A. committee, informed EDITOR & PUBLISHER that he had not resigned and had no intention of resigning at this time. A. N. P. A. headquarters declined to comment, in the absence of L. B. Palmer, manager. C. H. Taylor, Boston Globe, member of the committee, referred inquiries to Mr. Kellogg. Other members could not be reached this week.

Nevins Joins N. Y. World Staff

Allan Nevins, editorial writer, has joined the staff of the New York World. In addition to editorials, he is writing a book review column under the title "First Readings," replacing the "First Reader," conducted by Laurence Stallings, now spending a leave of absence in Europe. Mr. Nevins was formerly with the New York Sun, and before that was editorial writer for the New York Evening Post. From 1913 to 1918 he was editorial writer for the Nation.

INSPECT RUM ROW

17 Reporters Make Four Day Tour of Liquor "War Zone"

Seventeen newspaper reporters and photographers returned to New York May 16, following a four-day "rubberneck" tour of Rum Row on board the U. S. S. Pequot, giving the public firsthand news of the coast guard campaign against rum runners.

Leaving New London, Conn., May 13, the Pequot steamed to positions off Montauk Point, L. I.; Newport, R. I.; Fire Island Inlet, L. I., and Atlantic City, N. J. During the trip the reporters boarded the U. S. S. Mohave to interview Commander W. H. Wheeler, who is in general charge of the operations of the coast guard rum fleet. An "over-the-side" interview with the commander of a rum ship was also held. Twelve rum boats were seen, in comparison with the 68 off shore before the rum war began.

One newspaper woman, Margaret Ball, of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, made the trip, which was said to have been far from smooth sailing.

Among the newspaper men on the trip were Walter Bobin, Associated Press; William J. Losh, chief of the Washington bureau, United Press Associations; Robert S. Thornburgh, International News Service; Glenn Tucker, New York World; Bob Dorman, NEA Service, Inc.; Morris Judd, New York Sun; Dudley Nichols, New York Evening Post; Percy Stone, New York Herald Tribune; and M. Colmstock, Boston Post.

The inspection trip was made possible by Lt. Commander Stephen S. Yeandle.

DRAMA CRITICS UNITE

"First Nighters" Organize in New York with Metcalfe, President

Dramatic critics of New York daily newspapers and editors of theatrical trade papers have formed an organization called "The First Nighters." They will take possession of the third floor of Keen's Forty-fourth street Chop House, which will serve as club rooms and a work shop.

The officers, who will serve one year, are James S. Metcalfe, Wall Street Journal, president; Stephen Rathbun, Sun, first vice president; Heywood Broun, World, second vice president; Edward E. Pidgeon, Journal of Commerce, third vice president; George Van Cleve, American, treasurer; Bernard Simon, Morning Telegraph, recording secretary; Max Lief, Daily News, corresponding secretary; Kelcey Allen, Women's Wear and Daily News Record, librarian.

The Board of Governors is made up of Alexander Woollcott, Sun; Gilbert W. Gabriel, Telegram-Mail; Kelcey Allen, Fred McIsaacs, George S. Kaufman, Times; John Anderson, Evening Post; Edward E. Pidgeon; John MacMahon, Daily Mirror; Sime Silverman and Jack Lait, Variety, and James S. Metcalfe.

Ralph King Is Dead

Ralph S. King, 37, assistant city editor of the Waukegan (Ill.) Sun who less than a year ago went to jail for 30 days for contempt of court rather than betray the source of information in a news story, died in Waukegan, May 15, of an infection of the kidneys. King wrote a story about alleged corruption among public officials in North Chicago. He was summoned into court and directed to tell the source of his information, but refused. He brought a typewriter to his cell and wrote daily stories of jail life, including an exclusive story for EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

St. Louis Star Elects

T. L. Ryan, general manager and treasurer, and Frank W. Taylor, Jr., managing editor, were added to the board of directors of the Star-Chronicle Publishing Company, publishers of the St. Louis Star, at the annual meeting of the stockholders, May 14, thus increasing the directorate from five to seven members. James T. Pettus, a vice-president of the International Shoe Company, was elected a director to succeed W. Christy Bryan. Officers elected are: president, Elzey Roberts; chairman, Frank P. Glass; vice-president, Frank P. Glass, Jr.; secretary, Henry D. Sum; treasurer, T. L. Ryan.

Spencer Planning Seattle Meet

Canadian Papers Merged

Kincardine (Ont.) Review, of which Col. Hugh Clark, ex-M. P., has been editor and proprietor for 35 years, has been sold to J. J. Hunter, proprietor of the Kincardine Reporter, and the two papers will be merged as the Review and Reporter under the management of Mr. Hunter.

CLAGUE TO ADDRESS I. C. M. A. MEET

Managing Director and Chief Auditor Will Represent A.B.C. at Circulator's 27th Annual Convention, Colorado Springs, June 9-11

Stanley Clague, managing director of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, is expected to address the 27th annual convention of the International Circulation Managers' Association at Colorado Springs, June 9-11. His subject is scheduled as "Some Problems Which the I. C. M. A. Can Help A. B. C. Solve for the Good of the Newspapers and the Bureau."

The Bureau will also be represented by E. W. Chandler, chief auditor, who will speak on bookkeeping methods.

Other important speakers are on the program, which has been prepared under the direction of W. C. Hixson, of the Syracuse (N. Y.) Post-Standard. Interesting entertainment features are being arranged by Will A. Butler, of the Colorado Springs Gazette and Telegraph.

The Rock Island route has been selected as the official route for those leaving for Colorado Springs by way of Chicago. Train No. 7, which leaves Chicago June 7, at 10 A. M., and due to arrive at Colorado Springs the following day at 2:35 P. M., has been designated, and an effort is now being made for a special train. This matter is in the hands of J. N. Eisenlord, of the Chicago Evening American.

The Broadmoor Hotel will be official convention headquarters. The hotel is the property of Senator Penrose, one of the owners of the Colorado Springs Gazette and Telegraph.

The annual banquet is set for June 10 with Judge Ben Lindsey, famous juvenile judge of Denver, Colo., who will talk on newsboy welfare.

Other speakers on circulation topics will include Thomas J. Dowling, Cleveland Press; John Schmid, Indianapolis News; Charles Payne, Indianapolis Star; W. J. Harrison, Los Angeles Herald; J. C. Montgomery, Detroit News; David H. Smith, Portland (Ore.) Oregon-Journal; M. B. McNabb, Omaha (Neb.) World-Herald; Charles S. Wilson, Columbus (O.) Dispatch.

And also: H. C. Kloecker, Cincinnati (O.) Enquirer; Ralph Decker, Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat & Chronicle; E. C. White, Houston (Tex.) Chronicle; Harold Hough, Ft. Worth (Tex.) Star-Telegram; T. V. Armstrong, Ottawa (Canada) Citizen-Journal; H. H. Fris El Paso (Tex.) Herald; G. A. Fisher San Francisco Chronicle; and J. A. Mathews, St. Paul (Minn.) Pioneer-Press.

Robert S. Weir, association president, was forced to resign from the Syracuse Journal due to illness, and the Colorado Springs meeting will be presided over by E. R. Hatton, Detroit Free Press, first vice-president.

Other association officers are Charles Payne, Indianapolis Star, second vice-president; and Clarence Eyster, Peoria (Ill.) Evening Star, secretary-treasurer.

Sketches Replace Photographs

Press arrangements similar to a national convention, but lacking some of the most vital machinery, were afforded reporters covering the murder trial of William D. Shepherd in Chicago. Photographers were barred and the newspapers, for the first time in years, appeared with courtroom sketches instead of the familiar flashlight scenes. Along with the cameras, the court barred typewriters and telegraph instruments, but a special room was equipped with these facilities, just outside the court.

Havana Post Plant Burns

The plant of the Havana Post, English language daily, was wrecked by fire May 20. Arrangements have been made to continue publication from the plant of the Havana Telegram. The Post was established 25 years ago.

CITY EDITOR CONDEMNS "CANNED COPY"

'ault Lies with Newspaper Proprietors in Not Demanding Right of Access to Principals for Reporters, Says Dwight S. Perrin, New York Herald Tribune.

)WIGHT S. PERRIN, city editor of the New York Herald Tribune, ected president of the Newspaper Club New York, May 4, made an emphatic ea this week for return of the day of e working newspaper man.

"Press agentry," he declared, "has een altogether too convenient an in- itution for lazy reporters, who have come quite content with canned hand- uts.

"The business of reporting is in dan- er of degenerating into a sort of green ap messenger service, because of the me-saving labor-saving mimeographs f press agents, better known in many otable cases as suppress agents," Per- in said.

His statement was, in a sense, response o a letter sent the Three-Em-Dash, fficial monthly publication of the club e heads, by a New York press agent who requested the opinion of a compe- ent news editor on publicity work.

"Publicity work," in Mr. Perrin's opin- on, "is decidedly harmful to the news- apers, and therefore to the public which the newspapers represent."

Realizing, however, that glittering eneralities are more glitter than value, e proceeded to dissect the phrase "pub- icity work" in scientific manner, placing ad in one group and good in another efore, like an Arrowsmithian doctor, he would essay a controlled remedy.

Mr. Perrin, in the end, would not play ponsor to any quack nostrum.

"The only remedy I can see," he said, 'is highly improbable and impossible."

"Dr." Perrin's pessimistic prescription s:

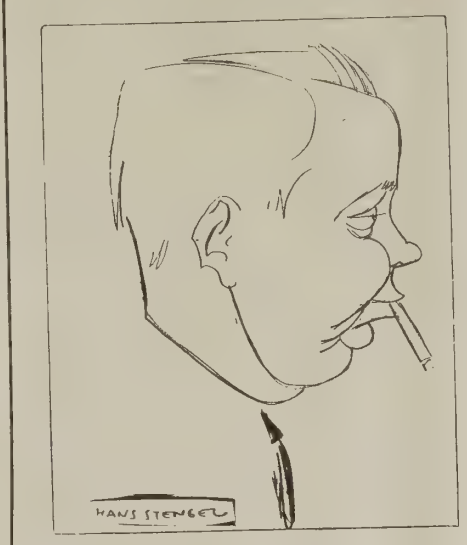
"Let the owners of newspapers get ogether and serve notice on Wall street, Broadway and Fifth avenue, all the news- makers of the town, any town, in terms somewhat as follow:

"'We are not going to print your stuff any longer unless you allow our own men to get the news from principals themselves.

"'We want our reporters to see J. P. Morgan when necessary, not his secre- tary or his publicity expert.'

"The newspapers would be bound to win. But my remedy is highly impos- sible. The present publicity system is fostered and encouraged by the men who own newspapers. Managing editors, city editors, and news editors cannot stop it."

Whereupon, Mr. Perrin wasted another match on his pipe, which soon died out, and continued to survey the present pub- licity system from all angles.



"The Ivy Lees," he said, "are becom- ing boastful. And why not? There are too many reporters today content with typed-out statements. Their only intel- ligent question often is 'Have you got any canned copy with you?'

"Ivy Lee himself boasts of young men who come to him on stories, accept his mimeographs, slip them in their pockets, and return to their offices without asking a single question.

"Thus men get jobs, the most important function of which is to keep news out of the newspapers.

"What the newspaper business needs most of all today is a return in large numbers of working newspaper reporters. Of course, there is no complete lack now. Newspapers would fail miserably did not staffs number some men like Mul- roy and Goldstein who won last year's Pulitzer Prize."

Mr. Perrin divided publicity into two general classes: the typed statements handed out when a question of public interest is at issue; and the ordinary run of space-grabbing copy. The former cheats the reader and therefore the news- paper, he pointed out, while the latter cheats the newspaper and, therefore, the reader.

What the newspaper business needs is the return in large numbers of working reporters.
—DWIGHT PERRIN

"Both classes have become too con- venient," he continued. "In the case of the statements, newspapers seem gradu- ally to have come to accept them as 'the best that can be done,' which very recently has occasioned loud boasts from publicity quarters.

"Publicity experts say the average re- porter is not intelligent enough to deal with the subjects, on which they act as sort of swing door between their bosses and the press. Unfortunately there is a large measure of truth in their assertion. Young men are no longer being trained in correct news gathering methods. They are not getting first hand contacts with the men who actually make the news.

"Possibly the annual situation at Al- bany is typical. There, in the legislative buildings, conveniently placed for the newspaper correspondents, is a large table measuring probably 10 by 12 feet. To this table the press agents of legis- lators, committees, and lobbying organ- izations bring their stuff and lay it out in about 15 or 20 piles. The correspond- ent enters and takes his pick. The day's story is thus prepared and pre- digested for him."

"The second class, the promotion story, the insertion of which should be paid for, is primarily a matter of mail clog- ging and wastebasket stuffing.

"Not long ago personal solicitation was the chief method employed by press agents to obtain free space in New York newspapers. This seems to have gone out of fashion.

"Now the publicity copy is accompan- ied by a letter written by a vice-president or publicity director. The stationery used is often very handsomely engraved, and bears an imposing list of directors of the business which wishes its news published in the newspaper. The pub- licity expert writes that he is confident the directors would be pleased if the attached mimeograph appeared on the release date in print.

"I got a novel request this morning," said Mr. Perrin, pausing to reach into his bulging wastebasket.

The copy he produced from the hellbox was of the "letter with story attached" variety. The letter was written on the stationery of the National Surety Com- pany, capital $10,000,000.00; William B. Joyce, chairman; E. A. St. John, presi- dent; Joel Rathbone, vice-chairman. The heading was further illuminated by the picture of a spread eagle perched on a globe, upon which was printed "World's Largest Surety Company"

In all this dignity, W. L. Barnhart, as- sistant sales manager, proceeded in a let- ter addressed to the managing editor to bid politely for free space for a story attached.

"We are sending you a stamped and self addressed envelope," read the novel request, "and will greatly appreciate it if you will have your secretary mail us a copy of your story."

"Can you picture the managing editor carefully watching editions to see that his secretary clipped out the 'free' story and mailed it to the 'grabber'?" asked Mr. Perrin.

"Press agentry has come to such a pass," he continued, "that New York city desks continually get telephone calls from what turn out to be press bureaus.

"The voice on the phone informs the desk there will be an important story should a reporter call at a given office at a certain time. Reporters are sent there and become free messenger boys carrying useless canned copy. Thus the publicity experts have become so expert they no longer do their own work.

"An outrageous development of the publicity system in the last two or three years is the free space requests being made by exhibits and expositions, so called. Some are of public interest. Oth- ers decidedly are nothing in the world but advertising schemes, such as electrical de- velopment expositions, radio shows, and the like.

"It has become the newspaper custom to give almost unlimited space to such affairs, when the space should be paid for, or else stories of more interest to the pub- lic used.

"Then there are drives of the Salvation Army, Cathedral, Orphans Home, or what not—all worthy charities, but I some- times feel newspapers are too generous in assisting in money raising for others at the expense of their news columns.

"Friday and Saturday, for Sunday re- lease, are the two biggest days for the mail-clogging agents. On the Herald Tribune we throw away more than 50,000 words of mimeograph copy every week- end as absolutely worthless. The less harmful we use.

"For there is a test to which publicity copy can be put. There is, to my mind, such a thing as legitimate publicity. If the free release has sufficient reader inter- est, we often stamp it as a press agent story and use it.

"And again, the flotation of a big bond issue by J. P. Morgan & Co., which, while a remarkable free advertisement, has suffi- cient interest to the bankers, financial men, and public in general to make its use in the news columns legitimate.

"Nevertheless, I do not see how any newspaper man could think otherwise than that the present publicity and hand-out era, is proving harmful to the newspa- pers."

The newspaper man who holds this de- cided opinion today was once a press agent himself. He has the advantage of being able to see both sides of the ques- tion. His present conviction, therefore, would seem the more valuable.

At one time, Mr. Perrin was in charge of the publicity department of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, under F. B. Warren, former owner of the St. Louis Star, then vice-president and general manager of the motion picture concern.

He started newspaper work on the St. Louis Times, working there from 1908 to 1912, when, at 22, he went to Reno, Nev., to become city editor of the Reno Gazette. Without doubt city editor meant an all-round training in Reno. At any rate, after experience there, Perrin was able to come to New York and get work without much difficulty on the staff of the New York Evening World, under Charles Chapin, which meant more good training. From the Evening World, he went to the New York Morning Tele- graph and from there to the Tribune to work in the Sunday department.

At this point, his newspaper career was interrupted by his fling in the moving picture world. After his Goldwyn con- nection, he went back to the Tribune to resign again to rejoin Mr. Warren as as- sistant general manager of the Associated Producers, a moving picture company, which lived about a year. Mr. Warren then organized the F. B. Warren Cor- poration and made Mr. Perrin vice-presi- dent and general manager.

This title Mr. Perrin shortly dropped to become again a reporter on the staff of the old Tribune. After a few months he was made night city editor. Six weeks before the New York Herald was pur- chased by the Tribune, he left the latter newspaper to become the Herald's city editor. The prodigal's last return was at the time of the merger of the Herald and Tribune a year ago.

OFFER REPORTING PRIZE

Columbia Journalism Alumni Found Annual $100 Award

To encourage good reporting, a group of graduates of the School of Journalism, Columbia University, have founded the Franklin Matthews Prize in news writ- ing. Under this award, $100 will be given each year to a student in the school who writes the best published news story or feature article during the school year. Announcement of this prize in honor of the late Franklin Matthews, one of the members of the first teaching staff of the School, and a former executive of the New York Times and Sun, was made on behalf of the Alumni Association of the School.

At the annual meeting of the Associ- ation, M. S. Rukeyser, financial editor of the New York Evening Journal and a member of the Faculty of the School, was reelected president; Carl Dickey, man- aging editor of World's Work, vice-pres- ident; Ben Franklin, rewrite man on the World, treasurer, and M. Lincoln Schus- ter, head of the publishing firm of Simon & Schuster, book publishers, secretary.

Announcement was made of plans for a series of addresses at the School next year by leading editors and publishers, who will speak as guests of the Alumni Association.

NEWS MEN WELL TREATED IN GERMANY RETURNING CORRESPONDENTS SAY

Dispatches from Republic Uncensored and No Hindrance Met from Foreign Office, Declares Smith and Groat, A. P. and U. P. Men from Berlin

PRAISE of the freedom allowed newspaper men in Germany was given this week by Carl D. Groat and Charles S. Smith, correspondents for the United Press Associations and the Associated Press, respectively, in Berlin. Mr. Groat has returned permanently to this country to take charge of incoming cables in the New York U. P. office. Mr. Smith, following a brief vacation here, expects to return to his Berlin post.

CHARLES S. SMITH

Both reported the recent German political campaign, which resulted in the election of President von Hindenburg, and expressed personal views on the changing Republic, during interviews with EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

"The real story is coming out of Germany," Mr. Groat declared. "American newspaper men are granted more liberty in sending interpretive dispatches from there than from any other country at the present time. There is no censorship of any kind. Dispatches all go through without mutilation or delay."

Mr. Groat said that the idea American correspondents were at the "beck and call of foreign office officials" was "an entirely false impression."

"All American news writers in Berlin are extremely free in their reports about Germany," he said. "Their stories are often unfavorable to the government, but they are written without any molestation or hindrance from the foreign office."

Mr. Smith was of the opinion that the chief difficulty in getting news out of Germany was the lack of direct cable facilities, a situation, which, he pointed out, was speedily being remedied.

"Since the Versailles treaty, there has been no difficulty as far as censorship is concerned," he declared.

"Interest in Germany has increased all over the world, and the volume of copy filed from there has reached a new high record. The number of correspondents in Berlin now is several times as great as before the war."

An interesting sidelight of German publicity methods during the Hindenburg campaign was told by Mr. Groat.

"During early stages of the campaign, Hindenburg managers didn't seem to care for close relations with the American press. Then the German newspapers began to give a heavy play to conjectures as to what America would do if Hindenburg was elected, forecasting in some instances that big financiers would close down on loans.

"At this point the campaign managers got busy. Getting in touch with about six American correspondents, they told each an exclusive interview with Hindenburg would be arranged for him.

"But the correspondents were deluded. The wonderful exclusive interviews turned out to be largely duplications, and were arranged so that in general the questions answered were only those which Hindenburg's managers wished to be answered."

Both A. P. and U. P. men were certain the election did not mean any swift return to a monarchy. Should a monarchy return, Mr. Smith said, it would be constitutional.

"There is no question of monarchial government returning to Germany at this time," Mr. Groat said.

"It is true the monarchist elements are seeking to get back powers and privileges held under the Kaiser. And, to a certain extent, these monarchists are succeeding.

"When the so-called revolution came at the end of the war, the German laboring man was at the top. Now he has lost most of this power and has become a fairly subsurvient employe.

"But, if the illnesses of infancy are survived—and Hindenburg, consulting with Luther rather than the jingoes, appears to be making a successful start as a doctor—Germany will grow up to be a real Republic."

Sentimentality elected the Republic's president, both correspondents agreed.

"Hindenburg was his own platform, his own speeches; he said absolutely nothing during his campaign," Mr. Smith said. "His election was a question only of his life and his record."

"The 'old woman' vote elected Hindenburg," was the way Mr. Groat told the same story.

Living conditions in Germany are returning to normalcy, the correspondents said, and both recalled with sighs inflation days. Mr. Groat told how he with two colleagues in 1923 had hired a special train consisting of locomotive, baggage car, and passenger coach for the equivalent of $95 to take a trip from Munich to Essen to interview General Ludendorff.

Mr. Smith is probably the most traveled of all A. P. correspondents. He joined the service 20 years ago, following graduation from the University of Iowa and training on the Omaha Bee, Des Moines Capital, Washington Post and Washington Times. During the war, he made a complete circuit of the world, and has criss-crossed it many times. He has been in Berlin during the past five years. At the time of the "Red Terror," 1917-18, he was in Russia. His first work in the foreign field for the A. P. in 1905 when he was sent to South America. In the war he was correspondent for the A. P. in London, Belgium, France and Holland. Returning to London again, he was sent from there across the United States to China to take charge of the Chinese service. Then he crossed Russia to complete the circle at London at the time of the armistice.

Mr. Groat has been with the United Press nearly 13 years. He joined the association from the Washington Times. He first went abroad as correspondent on Wilson's second trip to France, where he remained until 1919. In 1921 he was appointed Berlin manager, retaining this post since, with the exception of a brief leave of absence in May, 1922.

Ink Bureau Issues Cost Manual

The Printing Ink Cost Bureau, which was organized Sept. 18, 1923, at a meeting in New York called by the United States Chamber of Commerce, to permit the co-operation of the entire industry in the matter of uniform cost methods, has prepared a manual which sets forth the uniform methods for determining costs as passed upon by the Bureau. It presents not only methods of cost determination but model balance sheet and profit and loss statements.

DAILY AGAIN COLLECTS RAIN INSURANCE

For Second Successive Year Milwaukee Journal Safeguards Realty Advertisers in Its Building Number

For the second successive year, the Milwaukee Journal has collected rain insurance taken out on its annual Real Estate and Building number.

The seventh annual edition of this number was issued on Sunday, May 3. Insurance to the amount of $5,000 was taken out covering all real estate advertising in the issue where the individual advertisement was 15 inches or more. The insurance was collectable in case one-tenth of an inch of rain fell between 2:00 and 5:00 P. M.; and in such case the Journal guaranteed to run the advertisements protected, the succeeding Sunday without additional charge. Rain fell the greater part of the afternoon and the Journal re-ran the advertising on Sunday May 10, according to its agreement.

Considerable uncertainty was evidenced by insurance men when the Journal sought rain insurance on its building number again this year. Following their experience of a year ago, when the Journal collected for rain which fell on April 27, the date of its sixth annual issue, 15 general agents in the north central territory, in session in Chicago, decided that such insurance was undesirable and that the newspaper did not have an insurable interest. When this position was brought to the attention of the Journal this year, representatives of the newspaper demurred. They argued that the paper was, in effect, the agent of the advertisers and purposed, by taking out insurance, to protect them against loss due to weather conditions that would prevent prospective buyers visiting the lots or inspecting the homes which the real estate men had for sale. The only way in which the advertisers could be safeguarded, it was argued, would be for each advertiser to take out insurance covering only his interest, which would have meant sixty or seventy policies of very small amounts; a situation not to be desired by the insurance companies.

The insurance was handled by the Auer agency, Milwaukee, and the policy taken out in the Ohio Millers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company.

Alumni Association Reunion

Robert E. MacAlarney, managing editor of the Ladies' Home Journal, Dr. Talcott Williams, director emeritus of the School of Journalism, Columbia University, and Dr. John W. Cunliffe, director, will be the principal speakers at the annual dinner dance of the Alumni Association of the Columbia University School of Journalism Saturday evening, May 16, at the Hotel Commodore. M. S. Rukeyser, financial editor of the New York Evening Journal and a member of the teaching staff of the school, will be toastmaster.

Pittsburgh Dispatch Asks Dissolution

The Dispatch Publishing Company, publisher of the Pittsburgh Daily Dispatch, filed a petition in the Court of Common Pleas of Allegheny County praying for a decree of dissolution. The hearing on the petition will be held on May 25 at 9:30 a. m. George P. Grise is president of the company, which suspended publication several months ago after the paper had been issued for about six weeks.

$3,000,000 PLANT FOR CINCINNATI ENQUIRER

William F. Wiley, General Manager, Announces Complete Plans for Fourteen Story Stone and Marble Structure—To Be Completed Within a Year

(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

CINCINNATI, May 19—What will probably be the most modern newspaper plant in America if not in the entire world, will be constructed by the Cincinnati Enquirer in the 82nd year of its history, according to an announcement made today by William F. Wiley, general manager and personal representative of the publisher and owner, Edward Beals McLean, who also owns the Washiigton Post.

WILLIAM F. WILEY

The new Enquirer building, which it is hoped will be completed within a year, will cover a ground area of 117 by 190 feet, facing on Vine street and running back to College street and will be 14 stories in height. With two deep basements underlying the superstructure, the entire floor area of the building will be equivalent to eight acres of steel and concrete construction fireproofed throughout.

Except for the air courts and light courts which will be faced with fireproof brick, the exterior of the building will be of stone and marble. The approximate cost of the building will be $3,000,000.

Five stories of the building will be occupied by the plant of the Enquirer, in addition to the basement and subbasements, the latter being utilized for the storage of roll paper and for the installation of a real system co-ordinating with the presses on the basement floor. The other nine stories of the superstructure will be utilized for rental purposes to business and professional men.

Practically the entire basement floor will be given over to the new press facilities of the Enquirer. There are to be installed at the outset 16 units of high speed presses which will occupy a space approximately 165 feet in length. Room is being provided for a duplication of this installation to care for future expansion. There will also be located on this floor one of the largest color presses in the Middle West, capable of producing color work in any desired quantity and number of pages. Here also will be a mezzanine gallery for the accommodation of visitors who may desire to see how a great newspaper is made. The stereotype foundry will also occupy space on this floor.

On the first floor a center hall will provide entrance to the counting-room as well as to the seven elevators. In the rear of the counting-room will be the offices of the circulation department. Printed copies of the Enquirer will be conveyed from the basement to the mailroom by mechanical carriers. A recess in the building will provide space for 13 motor trucks which will convey the paper to every section of the city. On the second floor, the Vine street side will be occupied by the advertising department while the College street side will house the art-gravure rooms. These latter will include not only the presses but the necessary photographic and engraving departments.

The third floor will be given over to the composing and typesetting department of the Enquirer and the photo-engraving department will occupy part of it.

The entire fourth floor will be occupied by the editorial rooms, which will be grouped about a statistical library and "morgue", a fireproof room in which are to be kept the valuable collection of photographs, drawings, maps, cuts, and biographical material. On this floor also will be installed a small hospital for employes who are ill or injured.

The administration offices and the general accounting department of the Enquirer will occupy a large portion of the the fifth floor. On the College street side will be placed a cafeteria for the benefit of employes. An assembly room will provide accommodation for the convocation of employes as well as for entertainments and dances.

All departments and all floors will have ample locker space, together with the highest grade of lavatory facilities, baths being provided for all departments. Rest and reading rooms for men and women employes will be a feature of the new structure.

The Enquirer will continue to operate at its present location during construction of the new plant. It will be erected in three separate units all of which will tie together in perfect unison when completed.

The achievements of the Cincinnati Enquirer during the past decade will have their culmination in the erection of this structure. Credit for this growth and development is largely due to the executive ability of William Foust Wiley, who for 17 years was the editorial head of the Enquirer and who since 1918 has been the general manager having charge both of the editorial and business management.

A native Ohioan, born in Tarlton, Pickaway County, Mr. Wiley began newspaper work as a Washington correspondent of the Enquirer at the age of 25, and so won the confidence and admiration of the late John R. McLean, then publisher and owner, that six years later when the reorganization of the Enquirer staff was made, Mr. Wiley was made managing editor.

For 17 years he remained in that capacity, occupying the post longer than any predecessor, even including Mr. McLean himself. In 1918 he was again promoted being made general manager in charge of the paper.

The proposed building is the second reconstruction of the Enquirer in less than 20 years. A little more than 15 years ago the plant was practically rebuilt, provision being made at that time, it was believed, for many decades of growth and expansion.

Speaking of this development, Mr. Wiley said: "Within one short decade from this reconstruction it became apparent that the Enquirer had already reached the peak of its mechanical facilities and had begun to find itself in the embarassing position of being unable properly to take care of its advertising and circulation volume. Since the present structures were erected a revolutionary advance has been made in the art of newspaper printing. The Enquirer press room, though large and commodious when erected, does not now lend itself in dimensions to the installation of the modern printing press, nor has it been found possible in any way to alter or add to present equipment to take care of the greatly increased circulation and the larger sized papers now being published.

"Coupled with the serious deficiency in black and white equipment it was found impossible to place anywhere in the present building additional or larger color and gravure presses. These are indispensable to the production of an acceptable and attractive Sunday newspaper.

"Primarily then the Enquirer has been compelled to provide larger quarters for its accommodation in the interest of obtaining proper and adequate press facilities. Having undertaken to solve this major part of its difficulties, it was determined to proceed with the erection of the most modern newspaper plant in America if not in the entire world."

ARCHITECT'S DRAWING OF NEW CINCINNATI PLANT

The new home of the Cincinnati Enquirer will rise 14-stories above the street. Five floors will be devoted to the newspaper, the remainder to offices.

TOLEDO BLADE PLANS MILLION DOLLAR HOME

Takes Option on Property in Heart of Downtown District—Expects to Build Three or Four Story Plant

Construction of a million dollar home for the Toledo Blade was forecast this week when option was taken by the Toledo Blade Company on a triangular piece of property bounded by Beech, Huron and Superior streets, Toledo.

The site chosen for the Blade's new building, within a block of the Toledo Times and the Toledo News-Bee buildings, is ideal from both news and distribution viewpoints. The new Toledo civic center, which includes police headquarters, courthouse, county jail and numerous city offices, is only a block away. Similarly interurban and bus stations are within a block.

Detailed plans for the new Blade building have not been drawn.

The deal means a new three- or four-story home for the Blade. As tentatively outlined, the building will occupy the entire Beech street frontage of 335 feet and 100 feet of frontage on Huron and Superior streets. The main entrance to the proposed Blade building will be in Superior street.

The property is regarded as one of the largest and most valuable in the downtown district.

The plans contemplate the immediate removal of the buildings already on the property to make way for the Blade.

Across the Beech street frontage is one of the city's numerous triangle parks, which will insure adequate lighting.

Farm Organ Sold

The Sioux Falls (S. D.) Farmer & Breeder, semi-monthly, established in 1878, has been sold at sheriff's sale to the Seaman Paper Company. Arrangements have been made, however, to continue the publication under a trusteeship. G. Y. MacMillan has been president and manager and H. G. McMillan, editor. H. A. Bereman, for the past 10 years with the publication has joined the Sioux Falls Daily Argus-Leader as an editorial writer. He succeeds Bryton B. Barron who sailed from Seattle, May 8, to take a teaching position in Manila.

Friendly Given Businses Bureau Post

Edwin S. Friendly, business manager of the New York Sun, was this week elected a member of the advisory council of the merchandise section of the Better Business Bureau of New York. This week he was also a member of the reception committee of the Fifth Avenue Association, when that organization gave a luncheon May 13, to the International Police Conference in New York.

Osaka Ball Team to Play Here

The baseball team of the Osaka Mainichi, Japanese daily newspaper, has arrived in this country from Japan to play a series of games with American teams.

NEW AND AUTHENTIC HISTORY OF THE HERALD OF THE BENNETTS

By ALBERT EVANDER COLEMAN-41 Years on the New York Herald staff

COPYRIGHT 1924 BY EDITOR & PUBLISHER - ALL RIGHTS, INCLUDING FOREIGN RIGHTS, PROTECTED.

CHAPTER FORTY-ONE

Mr. Bennett Devotes Closer Attention to His Papers — His Splendid War Record—Marriage, Death and Burial— Prizes Donated and Charities Established by Him

IT is interesting to note that after Mr. Reick had deserted the Herald, and Mr. Bennett spurred on to put all his wonderful energies into its management, that it responded readily to his talented touch. Office gossip had it that he was bound to "beat Reick and the Times, if he had to reduce the price of the Herald from three cents to one cent to do it!" The price was finally reduced to one cent on August 22, 1916, and the circulation rose steadily thereafter from its low average of 130,000 daily.

Mr. Bennett announced that he was both the "Editor and the Managing Editor of the Herald," and kept his Executive Committee under strict control. With Mr. Frank B. Flaherty, a man who had risen from the ranks of the mailing department, as publisher; with such able subeditors as Ohl, Brown, Kelley and Burke, the Herald responded to the magic lash of the editorial whip, and entered the period of the Great War, better equipped, probably than any other paper in the world, to give all the news and get its share of the big advertisements.

Handicapped as he was by being an absentee from the palace in Herald Square, it is interesting to recall the marvellous results of Mr. Bennett's skilful and judicious management of his great property.

The very fact that he was in the midst of the mighty upheaval in Europe, as a permanent resident, was of the greatest value to the Herald.

When the war began in 1914, Mr. Bennett at heavy cost, organized a splendid corps of able and energetic correspondents, typified by such ambitious young journalists as the late Don Martin, who sacrificed his life on the altar of duty.

Mr. Bennett, himself, manfully and courageously continued to publish the Paris Herald, when on Sept. 11, the near approach of the German armies to Paris, resulted in several members of his staff deserting him. Greatly incensed at their action, he went to the office, declaring he would bring out the paper himself, "with the assistance of the printers' devil," and he did.

Acting both as managing editor and reporter, and having been married the day before, these were certainly strenuous days for the famous newspaper proprietor. He obtained a big "beat" in his interview with the new American Ambassador, but the censor prevented its publication.

At this critical time, the European edition of the Herald was the only paper published in Paris; all the others either had suspended, or were being issued intermittently at Bordeaux. Americans returning from Europe were loud in their praise of the Paris Herald, which throughout the days of stress and strain, kept them in touch with home. The Parisians also were grateful, for without the Herald, they would have been kept in total ignorance of the dramatic, tragic and vital events that were happening in their own country.

Refugees regarded the feat of publishing the Herald as unexampled in the history of journalism. It was at this time that it had a page story, fully illustrated, of the first air battle in the history of war.

During the early period of the war, Mr. Bennett put in long hours of work in his office on the Champs Elysses, in Paris. He not only originated the general policies of his three papers, but also looked after the minutest details. From the New York office, regularly came current files of the Herald, in which each item was marked for identification, with name of the writer in blue, and of the editor in red. He read each article critically, and any corrections or suggestions were promptly cabled. He was not at this time a gentleman of leisure, but an earnest and indefatigable worker.

When the United States entered the war, the Herald's slogans—"It stands squarely behind Old Glory," and "Its loyalty never questioned," briefly defined its patriotic stand. Throughout the long drawn out and agonizing strain of the conflict, the Herald ever supported the Government, and its record is one that every American can feel proud of.

On Thursday, Sept. 10, 1914, Mr. Bennett was married to Baroness George de Reuter, widow of Baron de Reuter, and who was Miss Maud Potter of Philadelphia. The civil ceremony was followed by a religious service in the American Protestant Episcopal Church, where the groom had been baptized the day before.

In July, 1916, he, his wife and a stepson came to New York, when, Mr. Bennett sitting in his beautifully furnished sanctum, always kept in readiness for his sudden arrival, again personally supervised the publication of his papers.

Apropos of Mr. Bennett's marriage, Town Topics published the following clever verses:

J. G. B.

THE juvenile bridegroom who long hath forsworn
All festive occasions which lasted till morn,
Unless they were wholly and totally male,
Doth lower his flag—may his shade never fail!

Yea, never where matrons or maids would frequent
Was James Gordon Bennett allured by their scent;
To his yacht he would stick as a commodore true,
With a few Gallic Counts and a Baron or two.

Except when—oh,well, what the devil's the use,
We've all had our loves scattered far and profuse,
And though no exception to rule he may be,
Who lives but is equally heedless as he!

But James settles down unto marital ways,
And the staff of the Herald gets oh, such a raise,
That the nearby cafés with such unwonted wealth
Are filled with excuses for drinking his health.

His wife from her pictures should surely well fit:
She's a mouth most determined, a brow that's well knit,
Though it's sad to break off from our bachelor Jim,
At seventy-three it is better for him.

The Old-Timer.

After a pleasant sojourn in America, with a visit to Newport, Mr. Bennett and family sailed from New York to Bordeaux on Nov. 11, 1916, braving the imminent dangers of the submarine infested waters of the Channel.

It proved to be Mr. Bennett's last visit to his native city, and was his final farewell to the palatial Herald Building in Herald Square.

In November, 1917, he contracted a severe cold, the effects of which, coupled with the strain of his editorial labors, brought on a delicate state of health. In December, to obtain the benefits of a milder climate, he and his wife went from Paris to Beaulieu, where, however he grew worse, and eventually bronchial pneumonia developed. His physician and intimate friend, Prof. Albert Robin, was summoned from Paris. Again Mr. Bennett's marvellously robust constitution triumphed and surmounting the crisis, he seemed to be on the road to recovery, when on April 23, 1918, he suffered a relapse. Symptoms of uraemia made their appearance; his heart finally gave way, and on Friday, May 10, his birthday, an alarming change for the worse took place; the paroxysms of choking were more frequent and severe, and on the evening of the 11th he became unconscious, and so he remained, practically till the end, with his wife by his bedside, and in his 78th year.

Mr. Bennett died at a quarter to five on the morning of May 15, 1918, in his Beaulieu residence, the Villa Namouna, of heart failure.

His body was conveyed to his Paris residence, and the funeral took place on May 23rd, in Trinity Church, being attended by members of the French Government and the Diplomatic Corps. His remains were buried in Passy cemetery, near his home in the Avenue D'Iena.

At 6 A. M., New York time, the hour of the funeral in Paris, (eleven o'clock) all activities in the New York office in Herald Square were suspended for fifteen minutes, while the big shell tolled a requiem out of respect for the deceased.

The tributes to the great editor were numerous and impressive, while John Wanamaker sent a beautiful wreath to be placed on his tomb.

Mr. Bennett's death was sincerely mourned by his employes in New York, who had cause to respect him as always just and generous in his relations with them. Mr. Robert E. Livingston, at the time of his death gave this estimate of him:

"Without exception Mr. Bennett stood foremost among the journalists of this country for two generations. He was above all else a news gatherer and news publisher.

"With him it was a matter of getting the news wherever it was to be found, and at no thought of expense.

"Less was known of the multifarious activities of Mr. Bennett by Herald readers than of any other personage, for the reason he refrained from self-exploitation, either in the Herald or other newspapers. His name was never used in the Herald or Telegram. I was always a great admirer of James Gordon Bennett."

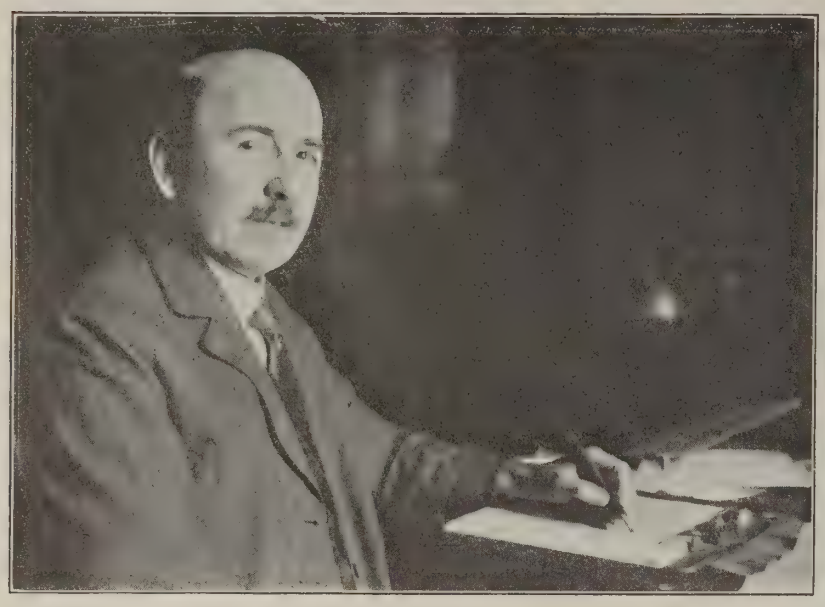
AUTOMOTIVE advertisers continue to prefer The Detroit News during 1925 as they did through 1924.

And the reasons are obvious. Through no other medium is it possible to reach so many home dwellers and prospective buyers of automobiles or equipment in the Detroit territory, for no other newspaper so thoroughly covers its field or has its great circulation.

Through The Detroit News automotive advertisers are able not only to reach practically every home in Detroit but also to cover the rich suburban territory and a great state population as well.

And Detroit News circulation is good result getting circulation. It is circulation that represents buying power, for readers of the automotive pages of The News have confidence in what The Detroit News prints and are therefore guided by its advertising. For years the automotive pages have been printed expressly for the reader, and are full of live, newsy items. In it he finds practical suggestions of value to him, new routes for his Sunday spins, touring information for his vacation periods and a host of things a man wants to know about his automobile.



Automotive advertisers are well aware of the attention getting value of The News which is reflected in their advertising results. That is why The News printed 58,968 more lines of this class of advertising than any other Detroit paper. Whether selling the highest priced car or a low priced automotive accessory, advertisers have found The News to be singularly more resultful than any other Detroit medium.

Public Can't Be Led or Driven—M. F. FERGUSON

MANY editors constantly harrangue themselves, and whomever they can find to listen, on their duty towards the public.

"We must be the vanguard of civilization", they say, "forever leading the ignorant into paths of wisdom and virtue, and steering them away from damnation pitfalls."

Melville F. Ferguson, managing editor of the Philadelphia Record, sees his duty rather differently, and said so in an interview with the writer this week.

"We cannot lead the public," Mr. Ferguson said. "And we cannot drive them. We can meet their demands in moderation.

"A newspaper, quite unlike a preacher, must give the public what it wants, within the limits of decency. If a newspaper becomes too ardent a preacher of what the public does not want, its circulation is apt to walk out, and leave it preaching to empty seats.

"But, in catering to the public's sense of humor, a vulgar thing at best, and the public's craving for sensation, we can exclude from publication the more nauseating of scandals, and feel, thereby, we have made some effort to curb, if not drive or lead.

"In other words, the public wants crime news. A newspaper must supply this demand, but need not give it out in alopathic doses. We need not exploit crime and stick it out as a bargain attraction in the newspaper front windows."

If the public, as a mass, cannot be lead, Mr. Ferguson does not despair of his reporters, and he believes an editor's duty is so to control his staff that it produces a newspaper that is a fair, accurate, undistorted mirror of its community.

Thus he has drawn up a code of reportorial ethics for the Record, the enforcement of which he makes his special task. Of 25 rules which make up the code, the following five are underscored:

"Get both sides of your story. When the circumstances reflect upon any accessible individual or group, learn what is to be said in explanation or defense. Fairness and justice demand it.

"Be accurate. Remember that in most cases the story you write will be read by some people who have first-hand knowledge of some of the facts. They will be quick to detect inaccuracies, and to characterize the paper as unreliable if it prints statements at variance with their own observation.

"Keep your personal opinions, or the supposed opinions of the paper, out of your story. Stick to facts. Interpretations and comment belong in the editorial columns.

"Avoid ridicule except when it is conveyed by a plain recital of facts. Nothing makes enemies more quickly; and one enemy of the paper exerts more influence than ten friends.

"Never write a story that you cannot successfully defend when an irate reader comes to the office to demand a retraction. If you keep this rule strictly in mind all the time you will keep out of libel suits."

Mr. Ferguson this month celebrates the thirtieth anniversary of his connection with the Record. He started as a reporter in 1896. Then he became assistant to the managing editor, later becoming editorial writer. He held the latter position until last summer when he was made managing editor following the promotion of John P. Dwyer to editor and president of the Record.

He is author of a book recently published by the Century Company, called "Motor Camping on Western Trails", which tells how he was spurred to a year of gypsying over trails that began in Philadelphia, ran to the Middle West, the Northwest, down the Pacific Coast, on to Hawaii, and back over the Southern route, northward to Chicago, and thence to the starting point.

Canadian Editors Shy at Prospect of Four Months' Australian Trip

It is reported that considerable difficulty is being experienced in obtaining Canadian delegates to the Imperial Press Conference to be held this fall in Melbourne, Australia.

The length of the trip, requiring some four or five months' absence from home, and the prospect that there may be a Dominion general election this year prevents a good many newspaper men from undertaking the journey. Under the arrangements made by the Imperial Press Union, the Canadian delegation will be limited to eight.

The delegates from Great Britain will arrive in Canada on July 18 and will sail from Vancouver on the new Canadian-Australian liner "Aorangi" on July 29, intervening time being spent in sightseeing in Canada. Arriving in New Zealand on Aug. 17, ten days will be spent visiting that Dominion. The party arrives in Sydney, Sept. 2, and after a two-weeks' tour of New South Wales and Queensland, reaches Melbourne for the sessions of the Conference about the middle of the month. After the meeting tours of Victoria, Tasmania, South and West Australia will be made as guests of the Australian press. The return journey to Canada will be started either Sept. 24 or Oct. 22. The British delegation will return home by Suez and the Mediterranean.

Western Daily Beats the Klan

Armed with sawed-off shotguns and revolvers, citizens and police guarded the plant of the Colorado Springs Gazette and Telegraph recently, following an exposure of Ku Klux Klan activities during a local election. The newspaper published the original application blanks to the Klan of political candidates after the latter had denied they were affiliated with the hooded order. Threats of violence were sent the newspaper. No damage resulted, however, and anti-Klan candidates were elected by large majorities.

Buyers of a Great 3,000,000 Market Right in Your Hand

The Cleveland Plain Dealer has been recognized for years as one of the country's great newspapers. Year after year its position as the dominant advertising medium in Northern Ohio has become more firmly fixed in the minds of advertisers. For the Plain Dealer is not only the family newspaper of Cleveland, but is read and followed religiously by thousands of buyers throughout Northern Ohio.

The Sales Manager of today knows that the Cleveland market is considerably more than just Cleveland. He knows that the city of Cleveland is divided into districts that differ greatly in their buying power. He knows, too, that within easy access of Cleveland are numerous smaller jobbing centers that are essentially parts of this great 3,000,000 market as Cleveland itself.

And this Sales Manager—ever alert for better and more economical ways of accomplishing his ends—knows that he can adequately cover the buyers of this prosperous market with one newspaper at one advertising cost.

Measure the Plain Dealer by any standard —circulation, quality or results—and you'll find it capable of doing the job for you in Northern Ohio.

No matter what kind of merchandise you sell, no matter whether your problem is reaching the jobber, the retailer or the consumer—the Plain Dealer can help you.

EDITORS ADMIT LIBEL IN PUBLIC STATEMENT

R. W. Ernest and Paul V. Hester of Anaheim (Cal.) Plain Dealer Say They Maliciously Slandered Local Pastor During Election

Characterized by a most frank admission of criminal libel, the final issue of the Anaheim (Cal.) Plain Dealer, a daily newspaper, appeared May 8, after a career of 27 years.

In the last issue of the paper, R. W. Ernest and Paul V. Hester, publishers of the Plain Dealer, confessed to numerous falsehoods in charges printed during a recent municipal recall election against the Rev. J. A. Geissinger, pastor of the Methodist Church in Anaheim.

At the same time, the pastor dismissed a $90,000 libel suit against the newspaper, in consideration of the publishers printing the retraction and paying Geissinger's attorneys in the libel action a $5,000 fee.

During the recall campaign, the Plain Dealer championed the side of the Ku Klux Klan, which at that time was in control of the Anaheim municipal government. Dr. Geissinger was a supporter of the opposition ticket, which carried the election.

In their open confession of having printed falsehoods against the pastor, the publishers of the Plain Dealer said in part:

"Both of us realize that, even though those articles appeared during a hotly contested campaign, they went beyond all bounds and were without foundation. The articles in question charged Dr. Geissinger with being a trouble-maker wherever he went, with disrupting the various churches he has served, with playing dirty politics, and directly accused him of organizing the bootleggers and old soaks of Anaheim to break down law and order and carry the election for an open town. Dr. Geissinger also was accused in these articles of being a pacifist and with disloyalty during the war, just escaping the hand of the law again and again.

"The Plain Dealer was drawn into this vicious personal attack in its support under recall of councilmanic candidates it backed last spring, and which had the backing of the Ku Klux Klan, but the attack on Dr. Geissinger was wholly without warrant, as he had vigorously championed law and order and religious liberty, and he was not a candidate for office, nor was he in any official relation with the U. S. A. organization, backing the recall.

"We wish to say that the statement that he was ever summoned before the Council of Defense for any personal lapse or any phase of disloyalty is wholly untrue. Nor was he ever in any pacifist meeting, much less ever present, as the Plain Dealer charged, when the Stars and Stripes were stepped upon.

"The Plain Dealer now recognizes that it was wrong in representing that Dr. Geissinger and the U. S. A. organization were working to restore liquor conditions in Anaheim.

"The Plain Dealer wishes also to correct another misrepresentation concerning Dr. Geissinger. We told our readers just before election that the threatening letter sent to him and which he published was a fabrication invented by himself or his friends for political effect. We had no right to make such a charge, as we had no information to that effect.

"The Plain Dealer has had for several years past an honest pride in the work and success of the White Temple under the direction of Dr. Geissinger and has seen it become one of the leading churches in Southern California during the last five years. Dr. Geissinger's work elsewhere has borne similar results and the Plain Dealer maliciously slandered him when it tried to make the people believe that he had been a builder of churches and a wrecker of congregations.

"We make these statements cheerfully and willingly, having sought to make them and to try to undo some of the injury we have done to Dr. Geissinger, his work and church here, and to the city at large. We have sought to do something to restore harmony to our community.

"We trust this frank statement of our guilt will have some weight in bringing about a reconciliation on the part of many former friends and a better understanding on the part of all citizens."

The Anaheim Bulletin recently purchased the plant of the Plain Dealer and merged the two papers.

For Wet Mat Printing Results with Dry Mat Facility use Certifieds!

To produce your newspaper as economically as possible is a laudable ambition. But to save a few pennies at the sacrifice of the best possible printing is not an economy but a fallacy.

Just ask yourself these questions. Does my stereotyper now have to steam his dry mats in order to condition them; does he have to oil them; does he lose considerable time (and patience) in packing his mats closely; does he find it necessary to iron out buckles and sinks in casting or between casts?

If he does, just add the cost of the extra time wasted on to the initial cost of your dry mats to arrive at their true cost.

Then try Certifieds. Note how readily they are conditioned without steaming; note that only a minimum of packing is required in the open spaces; note that they do not have to be oiled to prevent sticking to the plates; note how they stand up for cast after cast; and note the absence of buckles, wrinkles and sinks.

And then compare the printed pages, and you will understand why some publishers use Certifieds for special work such as first pages, souvenir numbers, and why many, many more publishers use Certifieds exclusively.

Compare, is all we ask and we'll leave it to you whether Certified Dry Mats are not only, what publishers and stereotypers everywhere acclaim them to be, the best yet, but the most economical to use as well.

BRAINS AND ENTHUSIASM WIN OVER BLUFF AND BRAG IN SELLING

Real "Fighting" Salesmen Substitute Ideas and Specific Knowledge for Desk Pounding and Loud Talking—The "Real Article" Discussed

By CHALMERS L. PANCOAST

OUT in the wide open spaces of the West, when the great annual round-up was pulled off to gather in the cows and calves for the market, "Ride 'Em Cowboy," was the spur-up slogan. It made the buckeroos ride and ride hard, stick to leather and get their rope on a cantankerous cow.

Today in the business world the modern intensive sales-drive requires spurring up the sales force to make desperate efforts to lasso and corral more orders. In the mad drive for business the American salesman is being glorified just as Ziegfeld has glorified the American girl. The man who can get into the battle-for-orders and come out ahead of his brother salesmen is decorated with a distinguished service medal-name, such as:—Super-salesman, High-powered salesman, A Heavy-hitter, Go-getter, Ace-closer, Master-mind, Star, Heavy-weight, High-pressure-ace, Two-fisted, Hard-boiled, Fighting and High-jumping salesman.

It is in these carefully desk-planned sales drives that salesmen are required to spin the whirling top of fate. When a sales force enters into a so-called "big sales drive" a salesman comes out of the fray either a bum or a hero. It all depends on their luck—as they call it.

Every firm with a sales problem today—and all have plenty of problems—is on the lookout for men who can accomplish next to the impossible. The demand is for men who can wade in where even wonder-workers fear to tread.

Since this is the day of the high-powered salesmen, the fighting salesmen, what is the peculiar make-up or characteristics that distinguish the super-salesmen from his non-combatant, order-taking brethren?

There are two kinds of fighting salesmen—those who fight with their mouths and those who fight with their brains. In the old days, before the demand for intensive sales drives, it was just a matter of the ground-covering, order-takers to say —"Feet do your stuff." But today it is more than just a job of hot-footing it from prospect to prospect. It is up to the high-pressure salesman to say "Brains do your stuff."

The mouth-fighting salesman is a blow-hard, a one-time booster. He usually is better at selling himself to his boss in the office, than he is out on the firing line. He is a great artist in painting the picture of "What I said and What he said." The chances are he never said half he tells his boss.

These noise-making salesmen, who make their boss believe they are wonder-workers, are not so good when they face an audience that knows the difference between bluff and facts.

These are the fellows who throw their mouths into gear and their brains do not even turn over. They frequently get by for a time with their loud-mouthings but they are not the real fighting salesmen of today.

Bluff and bragging never sold goods and never will. Human nature is such that false front always inspires a desire to look below the surface. That is where the bluffing salesman loses out—there are none of the real fighting qualities beneath the surface—he is like a hollow log.

Some of the so-called "super-salesmen" play the subtle game—they operate through petticoats. Perhaps their sister's cousin's aunt plays bridge with the buyer's uncle's sister—this gives them a back-door entrance to the business. They always have some back door to sneak in through and creep upon the buyer with a blackjack in one hand and an order blank in the other.

There are salesmen who watch for advantages through acquaintances or friends to get an edge on an order. They are great on plans but short on performances.

Many clever super-salesmen resort to tricks and subterfuges to obtain an audience or make a sale. It is called the indirect selling. A cleverly thought out plan of getting to the men higher up through friends or relatives or some one with influence.

But dodging the straight method of selling by trickery is not fundamentally sound. Such methods, while considered clever and necessary tools to be used by the high-pressure salesman are not honorable and do not win rewards.

There is always a bad kickback when adroitness is used instead of straightforwardness. The only applause such selling methods receive is from sales-managers, who often in desparate straits will resort to subtle methods, because they are not heavy enough themselves to sell on straight lines.

The real fighting salesman does not resort of trickery, subtle methods, ladies'-entrance tactics or gum-shoe methods. He has two very outstanding characteristics—sincerity and enthusiasm.

I have met some real fighting salesmen. They were modest and quiet, and they were sincere in their selling talk and put their arguments over so enthusiastically there was a big-fist punch to their work.

The genuine high-powered salesmen today are "square shooters"—honest and direct in speech and action. They have grit, enthusiasm, sincerity and a never-quit spirit.

I recently made a close study of a sales organization that was made up of men who were considered a real bang-up gang of go-getters. In every sales outfit there is always one man who stands out head and shoulders above the others. It was so here. One fellow was mild-mannered with honest eyes. The others were faster and louder talkers. The quiet, patient chap had a personality that enabled him to make friends and hold them. He was not a spell-binder or an orator. He "knew his groceries" and had the courage to argue his story to a finish. He also possesed a quiet, bulldog tenacity, planned his work carefully and used aggressive sales tactics.

He did not blow-off around the office about what he had done or was going to do. He was not constantly trying to tell the boss that he was a wonder-worker.

By some he was greatly misjudged. Simply because he did not make a loud noise within hearing of the big bosses they spoke of him as a nice boy but not forceful enough. They thought he lacked punch and staying qualities.

But his manager was betting on this lad to come through. He had seen this salesman in action, and he knew that he was a man who used his talk and energy where it would get results.

At the end of the year the quiet, mild, direct salesman led in sales. He was the super-salesman, the high-pressure man of the gang.

While the others were seeking applause by big talk around the office this salesman was using both his head and his feet.

The scrappy, mean-tempered salesman is by no means the fighting type. The fellow who thinks he can get an order by antagonizing the buyer, usually has a yellow streak down his back wide enough to drive a truck down. A mad prospect becomes a sore and dead prospect—and I have never known a man to buy anything from the salesman who made him mad or insulted his judgment.

The coward and bully with his big talk and promises is not a fighting salesman—he is a finished salesman—he is usually through before he gets started.

In studying a great many sales organizations, I have found that the winning qualities are about as follows:—honesty, hard work, enthusiasm, good health, knowledge of goods, tact, diplomacy and patience. A man who puts these in his sample case has something which sells him for all time. If he fights with these weapons he does not have to be reselling himself at every call.

I have known fellows who thought fighting meant talking in a loud voice and hammering desks excitedly. This violent action only trademarked them with the wrong brand. They became known as one-time salesmen, and are a first cousin to the confidence man.

The fighting salesman of today, fights on faith. He has faith in himself, faith in his company, his product and his fellowmen.

THREE DAILIES BROADCAST KENTUCKY DERBY

THREE daily newspapers May 16 broadcast descriptions of the Kentucky Derby as that classic was being run. They were the Chicago Tribune, over WGN; the Washington Post, using WCAP, station of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company; and the Louisville Courier-Journal and Times, over WHAS.

The Louisville Courier-Journal and Times chartered a captive balloon, which they sent aloft over the center of the race track. Observers in the air telephoned the story to the broadcasting station where it was put on the air.

It was the first time since the advent of radio and in the history of the Derby that the famous race had been described to thousands miles away as it was being run.

PRESS AGENT TELLS ADVERTISING MEN HOW HE "PUTS IT ACROSS"

Bernard Sobel of Ziegfeld Enterprises Reveals That "Real News" Cannot Be Told—Says It Is "Fortunate" Public Believe His Fakes

AN amazingly frank confession of theatrical press agent tricks by which the public is deceived in regard to current productions was made by Bernard Sobel, publicity director of the Ziegfeld Theatrical Enterprises in an address before the advertising staff of the New York Times, May 20.

In addition to inventing stories and stunts "which cannot always be carried out because of expense and circumstances," Mr. Sobel revealed that the "real news" is kept under strict censorship of the publicity department.

"Real news about the production centers down to the amount of receipts, a fact that you never dare tell, and changes in the cast, a fact that you never dare disclose."

"Illness of members of the cast is another thing you never disclose," he continued, "for the reason that these things are detrimental to the show business."

It is "very dangerous" to let the public know that a star has been replaced by another person at a lower salary because the public would say that it is no longer the original cast, Mr. Sobel naively said.

In one place he remarked it "was fortunate" that the public believed one of his handouts because it put a fake "story" of a stowaway prima donna "over."

Following are excerpts from Mr. Sobel's address:

"I am going to outline a few of the various processes and phases of theatrical publicity. Everybody here knows everything about the theatre, and for that reason I am going to tell you the many things we strive to do in gaining publicity for a show. The first thing that we do is to present real news in regard to a theatrical production. This is, perhaps, the very best kind of publicity, because it is real news. Messrs. XWN and WZ are going to produce a new play called 'JONES 2D,' written by Miss Herrin, and the show will be presented at the Astor Theatre on April 21. There is your initial statement about a show. That constitutes news and everybody reads this and everybody wants to know about Jones. That very simple statement may be played up in many ways so that the news angle is still there, and yet a great deal of space can be gained from that simple statement.

"I will illustrate by telling you what I did when 'Louis XIV' was first bought. I sent out the statement that Mr. Ziegfeld would present 'Louis XIV.' at such a theatre on such a date, and I kept sending out this information regularly. Then, after the papers had presented this fact to the public, I would get a new story on the same old one. Consequently I decided that I would let them in on the actual meaning of the title a little bit further. So I requested the newspapers not to print the title 'Louis,' but to spell the name 'LOUIE.' This is something of a deviation from ethics, but even the New York Times accepted the supposed correction and changed the name.

"Some weeks after the new spelling was established I let the public in on more information, so instead of letting the newspapers use the Roman figures I asked them to change it to 'THE 14TH.' These changes puzzled and amazed the whole public, which had naturally been led to expect a historical production.

"Another thing that you have to do in theatrical publicity is to keep the show alive after it is once started. Now, I might tell you here—and this is a secret which my fellow press agents might not be willing to admit—that if a play is a good one it will sail on regardless of press agents. I do not believe this is true from observation of many, many plays on Broadway. I feel that the public must know continually about a production, and I certainly know how much cumulative publicity Ziegfeld has had in the past. Yet it is necessary to keep his name before the public all the time to keep the public curiosity whetted in regard to him and his productions. This is where the difficulties of press-agenting begin. The longer a production runs the less chance there is for any news concerning that production. Real news about that production centres down to the amount of receipts, a fact that you never dare tell, and changes in the cast, a fact that you never disclose. Illness is something that you never disclose. These things are detrimental to the show business.

"After the show runs three or four weeks some producer thinks that he can get a person who is competent to take the place of another person playing an important part, but at a lower salary. Such a change may take place, but it is very dangerous to let the public know, as the public would say that it is no longer the original cast. Sometimes, however, the change in cast is so well known that the publicity agent has to let the public know about it. He has to do it in some original way that will renew the interest of the public and let them want to see the new play. In the case of 'Adrienne,' Miss Siegel, prima donna, left the cast. We could not merely state that someone was to take her place. We had to announce an actress with personality and well qualified to take the part. Hence our story stated that a stowaway prima donna, who watched the prima donna during rehearsals and learned the lines and then crawled to the garret room and there did all the dances that the prima donna did and finally had managed to get the leading rôle of Adrienne. Fortunately, the general public believed this, and the story of the stowaway prima donna went over.

"There is nothing too sacred for my sacrilegious touch. I learn that a Prince and Princess of some Russian empire or other minor municipality are coming to America, and without waiting for matters of formality, I send out a notice to the Times and other publications that Prince and Princess ——— are to be the guests at the Follies on such and such a night. If this information comes out on Monday I try to give the formal announcement on Tuesday. In the meantime I send invitation postal cards to the Prince and Princess in midocean in order to satisfy the Times and also the ethics of my conscience.

"The holiday is always a very valuable thing for the press agent in tying up one's production with Memorial Day, Fourth of July and others. I put over a story concerning Mother's Day. I told the public that mothers of the Ziegfeld Follies Girls were going to have a special entertainment on the back stage. The mothers were there, but there wasn't any entertainment. It is not that I trick the public and the press, but that I cannot always carry out the complete stunt because of expense and circumstances.

"There are one or two more things that I wish to say about publicity. One is the use of the cartoon. The Times has its own cartoonist. Other papers within the last year have been a little more hospitable and have permitted wandering cartoonists to present their cartoons.

"In conclusion let me say that the whole process of theatrical publicity has undergone a startling change within the last four, five or six years. If you are followers of the drama you will note that the standard of the current play is far ahead of the plays of bygone days. The press agent must reach the new kind of play developments. He must school himself in the technique of the present and the future. He must know current events and human nature. There is nothing too ridiculous for a press agent to do and there is nothing too lofty."

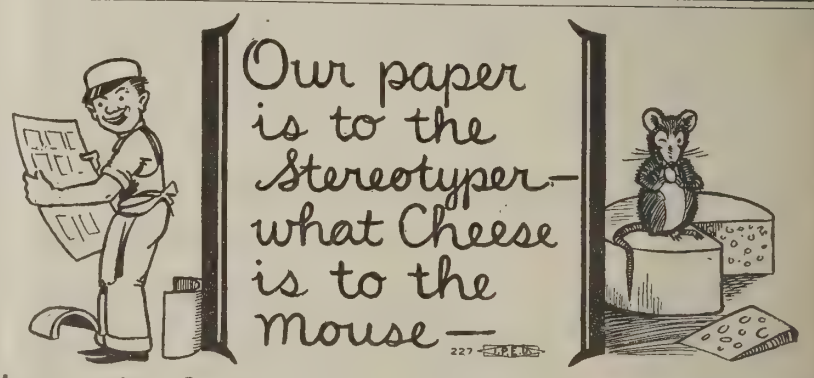
1100 HONOR BAVASI AT DINNER

Prominent New York Circulator Presented with $1,000 Tea Set—Formerly Delivery Foreman, N. Y. Globe

More than 1,100 newspaper friends of Joseph Bavasi, owner of the Mutual News Company, attended a testimonial dinner in his honor, held at the Pennsylvania Hotel, New York, May 17. He was presented a $1,000 tea set.

Mr. Bavasi, known in New York newspaper circles as "Frenchy," formerly was delivery foreman for the old New York Globe. He left that newspaper to take a similar position with the Post, where he had charge of the delivery and of the circulation department for three years. He was associated with the Tribune later for two years before its consolidation with the Herald, and became owner of the news company on Jan. 4, 1924, when three newspapers, the Times, the Tribune and the World, decided to change their delivery system and operate jointly through the Mutual News Company.



A large part of the efficiency in present-day handling of large quantities of newspapers, in several editions, is due to new methods inaugurated by Mr. Bavasi and carried out under his immediate supervision.

Representatives of every newspaper in the city attended the function, among them being Joseph D. Bannon, of the American; C. H. Sandkam, of the Herald Tribune; Norman Hoover, of the World; John Mansfield, of the Journal; J. M. Annenberg, of the Evening Post; E. Zoty, of MacFadden's; O. O. Scattergood, of the Graphic; Ed Cox, of the Hearst Publications; J. E. Hasenack, of the Sun; E. S. Friendly, of the Sun; Charles Flanagan, of the Times; Porter Carruthers, of the Herald Tribune, and Hugh O'Donnell, assistant business manager of the Times.

For those who accept the principle that want-ads furnish the surest test of reader confidence—and who will doubt it?—the want-ad pages of The Dallas News tell a convincing story.

Still, the fact that The News leads all Texas papers in number of want-ads will occasion no surprise among those who know their Texas.

EASY ESCAPE FOR GUILTY

THE new anti-publicity rule of the Federal Trade Commission is not, as has recently been claimed, a protection for the unjustly accused. The order, promulgated by Chairman Van Fleet and Commissioners Hunt and Humphrey, being a majority of the commission, is as follows:

"From and after this date, (April 6) in the settlement of any matter by stipulation before complaint is issued, no statement in reference thereto shall be made by the Commission for publication. After a complaint is issued, no statement in regard to the case shall be made by the Commission for publication uptil after the final determination of the case.

"After a complaint has been issued and the answer of the respondent has been filed, or in case the respondent fails to file an answer by the rules provided, the papers in the case shall be open to the public for inspection, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe."

The settlement of "any matter by stipulation before complaint is issued," without publicity, obviously provides an exit for others than the innocently accused.

When a complaint is issued by the commission a public document has been filed and when public documents are not immediately available to public inspection a practise has been established which is very unsafe, according to all legal precedent in this republic. It does not require a legal mind to perceive in this new rule several farsical means of escape for guilty parties who fear publicity much more than a cease and desist order.

In his able dissenting memorandum, concurred in by Commissioner Huston Thompson, Commissioner J. F. Nugent made this significant remark:

"I believe that the purchasing public have the right to know from the Commission's public declaration the names of those manufacturers and merchants who, wilfully and deliberately, by misbranding, false and misleading advertising, adulteration of their products, etc., have robbed them of their money. I am of the opinion that, in that event, it would necessarily follow that such of the customers of the class referred to as became familiar with the facts, would discontinue patronizing them and divert their trade to their honest competitors, and that the latter are entitled to such increased trade by reason of their honesty and square dealing."

We repeat, the Federal Trade Commission is a broken arm, and the forces of honest advertising, carrying the banner of truth, owe it to their cause to fight to restore this lost power.

Knickerbocker Press, of Albany, N. Y., asks whether a crimeless newspaper would publish the assassination of Lincoln or McKinley or the black crime of Sarajevo, and says that a newspaper which does not print the news of a crime becomes an inferential accessory to that crime.

MORE PULL; LESS PUSH

STRIKING economics were expounded last week at Houston by John Benson, of Chicago, when he declared that there are too many merchandise dealers and jobbers and that advertising must "build up more consumer pull and reduce selling push all along the line." He told of the futile struggle of inefficient retail business and declared that the chain-store and mail-order house are destined to abolish the little, incompetent stores and make local shops mere supply depots for public convenience. "Advertising would make salesmanship unnecessary," he said. "Copy should be interesting, informative, sincere and specific."

Progressive newspaper administrations are striving to hook up chain-store activity with local advertising. Such executives also look forward to huge future mail-order advertising traffic. Incompetent retailing is rapidly taking its own life in every city. The new science lies in distributing meritorious merchandise, which is able to stand the tests of national advertising, in larger volume, at lower price and at smaller profit margin.

By 1930 this country will have witnessed a revolution in co-operative production and marketing and in mail-order and local retail distribution.

There is such a thing as carrying the pretty girl picture feature to extremes, as Heywood Broun points out in a humorous criticism of a caption which recently appeared in a New York paper, reading: "Miss Lillian Molton, of No. 299 Park avenue, caught by the photographer as she returned to her home from a shopping tour."

He that tilleth his land shall have plenty of bread: but he that followeth after vain persons shall have poverty enough.—Proverbs; XXVIII, 19.

CORRECT PUBLICITY STAND

WHEN an advertising agency submits to a newspaper a piece of free publicity and the editor or manager discards it, will that act affect the agency's future choice of the paper as an advertising medium?

It is a question that has bothered many publishers.

N. W. Ayer and Son, in a letter to a publisher, make the emphatic declaration that publicity which is sent out by that agency, whether used or unused, has no bearing whatsoever upon the agency's choice of advertising media. The letter reads, in part, as follows: "Our advertising lists are not made up with reference to the papers that use or reject the publicity articles we distribute. So you can use it all or throw it all into your waste basket with complete assurance that in either event you will not be affecting our consideration of your paper as an advertising medium."

Furthermore N. W. Ayer and Son declare that they "vouch for the accuracy of all the material we release," that they send publicity only to news desks and expect editors to decide whether it is interesting enough to print and they positively assert that they do not take publicity work for profit or to defeat advertising, but as an accommodation to clients.

This is a clear and admirable statement and is decisive as regards that agency. If an advertising agency must handle publicity it should be on that basis. Advertising which is contingent upon the publication of free publicity is obtained at a very high cost; publicity which is sent to newspapers through advertising channels is off its course; publicity which is intended to take the place of advertising is a cheat; publicity which is mere partisan commercial propaganda is a fraud upon readers and an imposition upon publishers; and the meanest traffic we know of is that of the agency which proposes to feed its advertising to magazines and its free publicity to newspapers.

The letter from N. W. Ayer and Son is a real refreshment.

The true story of how a little business became a big business through newspaper advertising is the most telling argument in selling space to beginners.

THE NORTH AMERICAN SALE

SOME protest follows the merging of the Philadelphia North American with the Public Ledg occasioning the loss of the oldest newspaper America as a separate entity. The North Ameri was a newspaper of character and remarkable in pendent courage. E. A. Van Valkenburg, in his made it a strikingly bold and effective champion a concept of progressive Americanism. It was belo by many thousands of readers and also raised a of enemies, as all fearless newspapers must. It well-edited and had periods of apparently sound p perity.

That any degree of censure should fall upon Cy H. K. Curtis for his part in the transaction would unjust. The fact is that the pressure to sell c from the Wanamaker heirs and Mr. Curtis' purch was a natural business move. He did not buy suspend publication of a soundly successful newspa He did buy a newspaper that had lost its gui spirit and was on the market because its owners no journalistic ambition and were dissatisfied their profit returns.

In selling the North American the Wanam heirs had, we are told, only a commercial mo They desired to make a real-estate investment greater profit. They did not care for the N American for what it represented to the journ craft.

Mr. Curtis manifestly could not have continue North American as a rival to his Public Ledger it must be sold it was evident good business for to buy it and merge the two morning newspa The criticism that a free voice was ruthlessly s by Mr. Curtis, is not fair.

Schools of journalism that turn out crops youths imbued with the idea that press-agent which preys on newspapers and deceives t reading public is a legitimate and profitab occupation, are distinctly disserviceable American journalism and extremely doubtf educational enterprises.

ELIHU ROOT'S RETROSPECT

IN the twilight of life, admitting all of the encies of old age to criticise youth, Elihu believes that there is today a far greater in in public affairs in the United States than ever b better understanding of the duties of citizenship, honest elections, better administration of public more humanity and compassionate grace amon people, more broad-minded treatment of affairs, standards of education and of individual conduc patriotism.

We hold that the newspaper is the strongest influence in the affairs of government and citizenship. With all their admitted faults, the papers of this country do sustain the foundati the republic. Fight for honest and able news and you fight for the highest ideals of free g ment and progressive individual life.

If it does not seem reasonable, fair or t don't pass it into print.

HARRY'S HARRIED HEART

ADVICE to lovelorn men is a new feature New York Evening World. There ar ful letters from Trembling Tommy, Dick and Heartsick Harry, detailing their "She will not listen to my pleas until I have $200, and this will take three years—should I "She is going out every night with that Boile Bum, but I know she loves but me." "When looks at you like that, is a man justified in ing?" And, of course, many letters about th ence of a new moon on heartstrings.

All letters are seriously answered, exactly same spirit as the perennial advice to lovelorn The feature will be thoroughly enjoyed by readers, and there appears to be no lack, in thi age, of men wearing hearts on sleeves.

PREPAREDNESS

The keystone of the Central Press Association's daily illustrated news-mat service is preparedness art on potential news events.

The ancient wise man who expressed himself to the effect that "a picture is worth 10,000 words," should have added, "If it's TIMELY." The Central Press full service gives you a wealth of timely art for use with the big stories while they're breaking, as well as covering all of the events pictorially "on the spot."

Ask our clients about our preparedness art on New Year's, Lincoln's Birthday, the presidential conventions, election and inauguration, opening of the baseball season, 150th anniversary of the Revolution, Mother's Day, Spanish-American war anniversary, Kentucky Derby, Memorial Day, July 4, Labor Day, Columbus Day, Armistice Day, Christmas. All this in addition to complete advance pictorial protection on the world and polar flights, important trials and appointments, wars and upheavals, and all sporting events.

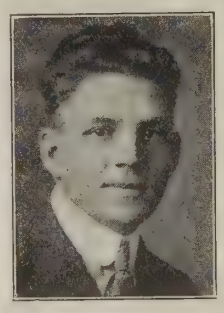
Publishers' Representatives Association of San Francisco, organized one year ago, with thirty members, elected officers for the following year at their meeting of May 7, as follows: Chairman, Don Gilman, Christian Science Monitor, succeeding R. J. Bidwell; vice-chairman, James A. Townsend, Butterick Publications, succeeding Robert J. Davis, Gilman, Nicoll & Ruthman; second vice-chairman, H. C. Worden, McGraw-Hill Publications; secretary-treasurer, W. B. Flowers, Capper Publications, succeeding L. W. Clark, Associated Farm Papers; publicity director, David Sandberg, Western Advertising. A "Code of Ethics" which is to be used as the basis for the formation of a Publishers Representative Departmental of the Pacific Coast Advertising Clubs Association at the July Convention at Seattle was adopted.

Montreal Press Club members turned out in force May 9 to honor at a banquet to three conferes who had recently been distinguished by receiving from the Government of France the title of "Officer d'Academie". These were Oswald Meyrand, chief editor of La Presse; Leopold Houle telegraph editor of La Patrie and Eugene Beaulac, city editor of Le Canada. R. W. Lipsett, president of the Club, presided.



Washington Press Association will hold its annual meeting in Spokane, August 21-22, O. H. Woody, president and publisher of the Okanogan Independent has announced. Mr. Woody also announced the creation of a cooperative advertising agency for the purpose of bringing to the front northwest manufactured products and to aid country newspapers with their advertising work. The agency became operative April 1.

ASSOCIATION CHIEFS

ALFONSO JOHNSON, business editor of the Dallas News, is the first newspaper man to be elected president of the Dallas Advertising League.

ALFONSO JOHNSON

The Dallas club was host to the international convention of the A. A. C. W. in 1912 when the "Truth" motto was accepted. It is the outstanding club of the Southwest and was instrumental in the organizing of many of the Texas clubs by helping Gurney Lowe in introducing the Neosho plan of community development.

Mr. Johnson was formerly U. S. Trade Commissioner to Japan and was business manager of the Japan Advertiser for two years. He is grand vice president of Alpha Delta Sigma, the national honorary advertising fraternity.

Mr. Johnson's appointment as trade commissioner was due to a survey of advertising possibilities in Japan which he made while doing newspaper work there; the results of the survey have been published in a number of magazines. An illustrated feature story by Mr. Johnson, "Selling Newspaper Space over the Hibachi" was published in the EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

CIRCULATION PROGRESS

California "Bug" Was in the Blood of Robert J. Corrigan

Robert J. Corrigan

IN September, 1919, Robert J. Corrigan went to California to become circulation manager of the Los Angeles Examiner, thereby fulfilling an early ambition. Now after nearly six years there, he out-boosts the most ardent California booster.

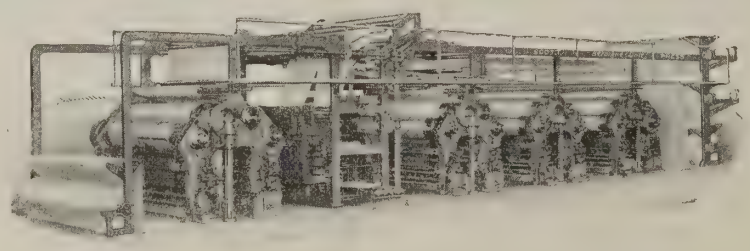
His first circulation management was on the Detroit Free Press, where he spent two years from 1906 until 1908. Previously he had been three years city circulator of the Indianapolis Star, and before that had served an apprenticeship on the Cincinnati Post, fighting it out in turn as a canvasser, road man, newsboy superintendent, city circulation manager and country circulation manager.

From Detroit he returned to the Indianapolis Star as circulation manager, remaining until 1912. The California "bug," he recalls, was in his blood at this early date, and he began his gradual trek westward, spending on the way a number of years as circulation manager of the St. Louis Star, and then two years in charge of the St. Louis Times circulation.

In 1916, just prior to reaching California, he went to Denver, returning to the service of the Shaffer group, which operates the Rocky Mountain News and Denver Times, and also the Indianapolis Star, with which he had previously been connected.

10 AUCTIONEERS FINED

Plead Guilty to Charge of Misrepresentation Preferred by B. B. B.



Ten Boston auctioneers were fined $75 each recently following their arrest on charges of misrepresentation preferred by the Boston Better Business Bureau.

In several of the auction rooms raided by the police at the instance of the Commission, nickel was being sold as silver, glass as diamonds, nickel as platinum, paper as leather, gold plate as solid gold and celluloid as jewelry.

Twenty-six articles purchased by Vigilance representatives at auctioneers' sales for $119 were later appraised at $49.21 as a fair retail price. They were represented by the auctioneers as being worth $661.

THE SOLID SOUTH

Today more than ever the term "The Solid South" is descriptive of the section of this country that has shown such stupendous advancement during the past years. The term was originally used to designate merely her political attitude, but today she stands Solid in everything. Here Solid enterprises are run by Solid business men on Solid principles in Solid American cities influenced by Solid newspapers. Here, more than anywhere else is found a Solid foundation upon which has gradually and firmly and enduringly been built a monument of Industrial Solidity.

Solid Industrial development must necessarily make for an equally great and Solid buying power. Evidences of this can be seen on all sides and in all fields. For instance, the South has one-third of the area—one-third of the population and three-fifths of the coast line of the United States. The South spends over $400,000,000 annually, for good roads. The South's agricultural production has an annual value of $6,350,000,000, while its manufactured products show an annual valuation of more than $9,100,000,000.

The advertiser who overlooks the Southern market is losing a wonderful opportunity.

Many lines, undeveloped because they have had no constructive newspaper advertising, have left open the way for unusual development of many Northern products. Get in touch with the newspapers listed on this page and become aroused to a genuine, constructive selling campaign in the South.

Advertise all your merchandise of merit in this list of Southern Dailies and be assured of

ADVERTISING AGENCY AFFAIRS

Philadelphia Agency Awarded Gold Medal—Rosenberg Forms Own New York Corporation—Crimmins Joins Newell-Emmett

YOUNG & RUBICAM, Philadelphia advertising agency, was awarded a gold medal for the "best planned and most artistic advertisement for 1924," at the fourth annual Commercial Art Exhibit, New York.

Arthur W. Munn, art director, was responsible for the winning copy, which exploited Postum under the caption, "Once in Every Woman's Life." The illustration accompanying the advertisement, drawn by Pruett Carter, received honorable mention.

More than 2,000 pieces of copy were submitted to the committee in charge of the exhibit. Of that number, 390 were selected as being representative of the finest advertising produced in America.

Louis Charles Rosenberg, for the past year vice-president of the Peck Advertising Agency, New York, has established an advertising agency under his own name, with offices at 171 Madison avenue, New York. Prior to his connection with Peck, he conducted his own agency at 25 East 26th street, New York. In his present venture, J. Dunn, for several years assistant production manager at Sherman & Lebair, will be in charge of production. Edwin S. Wadsworth, formerly treasurer of the Thomas Agency, has joined Mr. Rosenberg in an executive capacity.

D. J. Crimmins, for the past four years with Harry C. Michaels Company, and formerly with the Erickson Company, has resigned to join the contract department of Newell-Emmett Company, Inc.

Mrs. Anita Simpson, of the Chicago staff of Albert Frank & Co., was made president of the Women's Advertising Club of Chicago for the coming year, at the recent annual election of club officers. During the past year, she has been chairman of the club's program committee, and identified with many other of its activities.

The Midland Advertising Agency, Cincinnati, will direct all advertising for the Kodel Radio Corporation, it was announced this week. Lists will not be made up until July. General magazines, trade papers, and newspapers will be used.

The C. J. Oliphant Advertising Agency, Inc., will move May 20, to new offices in the Flatiron Building, 175 Fifth avenue, New York.

John C. McClure, who for many years operated his own business, "Christy Letters," has joined Buckley, Dement & Co., Chicago, direct mail agency.

WHAT'S WHAT IN THE FEATURE FIELD

P. & A. Claims Scoop On Hindenburg Pictures—Sir Philip Gibbs Writes On European Conditions—Wynne Creates "Step Word Puzzle"

P. & A. PHOTOS this week claimed a scoop of 24 hours in their handling of the pictures of the arrival of President von Hindenburg of Germany in Berlin. The pictures reached New York on May 18, and were transmitted to Los Angeles the same day by Telepix. They were taken May 11.

As soon as photographs were taken in Berlin the prints and negatives were sent by airplane to Cherbourg, including just one stop made at the French border for custom's inspection. With the co-operation of the United States lines, the package was at once transferred to the Leviathan, just before the ship sailed.

Sir Philip Gibbs has written a series of six articles on general conditions in Germany, France and Egypt, which are being handled by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate, New York, in weekly installments.

Arthur Wynne, who introduced the cross word puzzle in the New York World 12 years ago, has created a new feature he calls "The Step Word Puzzle." The patent and copyright are held by King Features Syndicate, New York.

Sol Hess, creator of "The Nebbs," visited with his former business partner in Minneapolis, last week. It was the 25th wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Madsen. Madsen and Hess were one time partners in a Chicago firm.

Ernest Bushmiller, formerly with the Red Magic feature section of the New York World Syndicate, is now drawing the comic strip "Fritzie Ritz'" for the same organization.

Penrhyn Stanlaws is drawing a series of 26 Sunday Magazine covers for newspapers through International Feature Service, New York.

Herb Roth of the New York World art staff is preparing a series of illustrated bedtime stories for the New York World Syndicate.

"Adventures of Junie and Jup," written anonymously, as though by a child, and illustrated by drawings done by the writer's child, is a feature added to the list of the McClure Newspaper Syndicate, New York.

The Universal Trade Press Syndicate, New York, has completed a survey of trade journalism. A questionnaire sent 102 trade paper editors covered such points as rates of pay for copy, principal editorial needs of trade journalism, opinions on standardization of make-up, etc.

Arthur B. Donegan has been added to the staff of the Kent Press Service. He will serve as city editor in the Chicago office, replacing Charles Delano who has been transferred to the Springfield bureau. Mr. Donegan was a staff reporter for the Chicago Daily News, and, more recently, assistant to Henry Justin Smith in the publicity department of the University of Chicago.

UTY OF ADVERTISING CLUB TO RAISE STANDARDS AND ETHICS

C. McQuiston Tells of Place It Should Hold in Community —Should Develop Advertising Skill and Make Copy Dependable

By J. C. McQUISTON

IE passing of the old time peddler has created a condition which makes ossible for us to say that there is a nite, well-recognized place in our erican community life for the adver- ig club.

the old days, the peddler with his on his back sold us much of the chandise used in our homes. He e directly into the home and dis- ed his goods. Later, as our buying oms changed and we began to look more favor on the practice of buy- at a permanently established store, peddler also changed his selling habits became first the storekeeper, then merchant, and possibly the depart- t store proprietor.

s a peddler, he called personally on customers. He did not need to ad- ise. But when he became a store- er, he was, of necessity, leaving it his customers to find him. Quite a rast between searching out the cus- er, and leaving the customer to find storekeeper.

his evolution in business has made modern advertising a necessity, both hose who buy, and to the merchant sells. To those who buy, it is a ssity, to tell them, without need of ing many stores where they can buy ain goods, what are the merits of goods, and the prices; to the mer- t who sells, it is a necessity, to tell people that what he has to sell, its its and price.

s advertising is a comparatively new g, those who use it, do not know how best to use it. Some users ve it must contain misleading, even e, information to draw people to their es; others believe it has no effect ll on buying habits of the people, and se to use it. It is the work of the rtising club to develop among those should use advertising, a skill in use.

he chief purpose and aim of the ad- ising club is to raise the standard ethics of advertising, to make ad- ising truthful and dependable, to in- the purchaser that an advertised le has back of it reputation and a antee of faithful performance. The rtising club places a careful watch all advertising and the result of this lance has been largely to eliminate tionable advertising.

is in this responsibility that the ad- ising club has won a prominent place he community.

he advertising club has won a prom- t place in the community, in another ect, also, that of building up the com- nity. Whether you live in city or ge, you are keenly interested in your munity, because it is here that you your most valued possessions— nds, relatives and home environment d you recognize the benefit to it chools, churches, playgrounds, every- g that will tend to lift to a higher e the physical, moral and provide ern comforts. Because the com- cial well being of a community helps do this, anything that promotes a ite place in the community.

he benefits of a chamber of com- ce, a civic club, and like organiza- s that promote this well-being, are erally recognized. It is also a recog- d fact that an advertising club in community is the right arm of the nber of commerce or board of trade, ivic club, and so it assumes a defi- place in the community life. In- , in many communities, the advertis- club has been the forerunner of the nber of commerce or similar organi- n, and thus has played the trail the commercial prestige of the com- nity.

The advertising club is made up, naturally, of the most progressive in any community. They are public spirited men and women who are more interested in the advancement of their fellow men and their community as they are in their own advancement. The gathering together of such progressive men and women develops strong community fellowship; the force of their united efforts is reflected in great benefits to the community as a whole.

What cities are best known to you? Why are they best known? What influence was behind making them so well known the world over? Miami, "The Garden Spot of the World"; Atlantic City, "The World's Playground"; Rochester, "The Kodak City"; Pittsburgh, "Home of the 57 Varieties"; Kalamazoo, "Direct to you," and other cities have been given national and international prominence through civic advertising. And don't forget that civic advertising—the advertising of the community as a whole—is a direct product of the advertising club.

You may think an advertising club is made up wholly of advertising experts. Such is not necessarily the case. The ideal condition is that in which the greater part of the membership is made up of men who benefit from advertising in their business rather than men who actually follow advertising as a profession. There are, however, enough experienced advertising men as members to contribute of their training and experience to the club, that it may intelligently accomplish its purpose—that of placing advertising on a more efficient, truthful and ethical basis.

Advertising clubs are not a dream of the future. They are firmly established in nearly all our up-to-date communities. These local clubs are all banded together into a national association so that they can exert influence on questions of national as well as local interest.

If there is no club in your city or village, talk to your leading business men and citizens and help organize such a club and begin at once to place your community on a higher civic plane.

FIGHT "CURE" ADVERTISING

National Health Council Holds Conference with A. A. C. W.

A conference on deceptive advertising in relation to tuberculosis, venereal disease, and cancer was held recently in New York by the National Health Council in connection with the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. Representatives of 37 organizations were present.

A resolution adopted at the conference urged the co-operation of responsible business and public health agencies in the eradication of advertising which promises cures for the above diseases. The conference also thanked periodicals and newspapers which have closed their columns to this type of copy, and commended the activities of organized advertising in promoting such standards of advertising that cures for tuberculosis, cancer and venereal disease cannot be recognized.

Among the newspapers represented at the conference were the New York Times, London Daily Telegraph and Indianapolis News.

The Times

THE GREATEST POWER IN MODERN ADVERTISING

FOR nearly a century and a half The Times has been the outstanding national newspaper of Great Britain. Its great history, combined with an enterprising modern outlook; the authority with which it speaks, and the superb quality of its printing and production, maintain it in an unassailable position as the leader of the British Press.

And as it is the greatest force in journalism, so it is the greatest power in advertising. It is the one indispensable medium for all announcements intended for the wealthy official, professional and business classes.

Each day's issue speaks for itself. Both the volume and the character of the advertising carried by The Times prove how indispensable it is to the advertiser seeking an entrance to the British market.

Advertising men who visited England last year were able to test these facts on the spot. But The Times is at any time happy to supply further information. If you desire to know more of Britain's greatest advertising medium, get in touch with

British Cabinet Writers Under Fire

A Labor member of the British House of Commons, May 25, will raise the question of whether Cabinet Ministers, while in office, are justified in contributing articles to newspapers on public affairs. Lord Birkenhead's activities as a press contributor are to be cited particularly. It has become a common custom for ex-Ministers to write for newspapers, and even for ex-Prime Ministers, since Lloyd George set the fashion.

EEKS TO FREE KOREA WITH PRESS AID

oul Editor Now in U. S. Studying Newspaper Methods—Hopes to Bring About Revolution Through His Paper

By Arthur S. Rudd

Duck Soo Chang, editor of the Seoul ong A Ilpo (Daily News), one of the gest and most powerful newspapers in Korea, is in America learning how to make his paper a successful instrument of revolution against Japan, which is he feels, "an oppressor nation." He is studying especially the "yellow press" for he believes that the crusading spirit of popular journalism is what his daily needs to successlly carry out the program which he s in mind.

Duck Soo Chang

Mr. Chang dropped his editorial duties Korea in the spring of 1923 after ming to the decision that he must know pre of journalism and of the world genally, if he is to accomplish the task freeing his people from the Japanese ke. His first summer was spent in rtland, Ore., learning to use English pre fluently than his oriental study of e language had enabled him to do. He en enrolled under Eric W. Allen, dean the school of journalism at the Unirsity of Oregon, for a year's special rk in journalistic subjects. Despite e handicap of having to struggle with e new language he did exceptionally od work and his written work is said have shown more careful preparation an many of his American classmates.

The young Korean spent the summer 1924 in an Oregon logging camp.

"Nearly all my people have to work ith their hands and I wanted to know mething of laboring conditions here for any of my problems have to do with e laboring classes," Mr. Chang exained.

Mr. Chang is now in New York workg for a Master of Arts degree in Politial Science at Columbia University. His esis is on the Marxian theory of govnment.

The Dong A Ilpo was started in 1920 d now has a circulation of 60,000. r. Chang was chosen editor by the ancial backers of the publication beuse they felt that his unusual experice and education especially fitted him r the post. Mr. Chang's life story ads like a novel.

He was born in Korea 29 years ago. ntil he was 11 years of age his father, ho was a farmer of the Confucian faith, ade the boy study the classics of Conicius. After the family's conversion the y was sent to a Christian school, where worked his way through high school the household servant of a Japanese ficer. This officer later took him to pan where Mr. Chang received his B. degree. While in Waseda university Tokio, Mr. Chang was the editor of Korean magazine.

In 1919 a revolution broke out against pan and Mr. Chang's ability as a nguist caused him to become connected ith important information-securing acvities of the revolutionists. He was ally caught and thrown into jail, where was stripped and beaten daily. His panese captors were unable to make m reveal the secrets of the revolution en by the use of a barbarous fingerinching torture device and the youthful gitator was thrown into a state prison. uring the eight months he was there read the New Testament through e times.

"The ideas of Christianity were so imessed upon me by these readings that ter editorial activities were influenced greatly," Mr. Chang said when discussing this episode.

After a short period of exile on an island in the Pacific, Mr. Chang was released to go to Japan and talk matters over with the Japanese minister of war. Though he made a bold plea for Korean freedom he was allowed finally to return to his own land, where he became editor of the first Korean daily.

Mr. Chang started at once to crusade for freedom. He was backed in his activities by Sung Soo Kim, wealthy educator and textile manufacturer, who is the main stockholder of the Dong A Ilpo. Because of the zeal of the editor and staff the paper was suppressed 20 times between its starting date, April 1, 1920 and September 30 of that same year. The activities of the Japanese police in suppressing the paper became so injurious that publication was suspended from September, 1920, until January, 1921.

Mr. Chang describes the publication of his paper as a sort of race between his staff and the Japanese police. The first paper that comes off the press is rushed to police headquarters in Seoul by a messenger boy. While the officials are censoring the sheet the circulation department are rushing as many copies on to the streets as they can print, but as only 15,000 of the total 60,000 circulation go to residents of Seoul, the police are usually able to stop a large part of the circulation if they see anything objectionable in the columns of the paper.

Mr. Chang's entire publishing staff is made up of about 70 people. The pages of his paper are about the size of an average eight column American daily.

Mr. Chang is one of the few orientals ever to be elected to Sigma Delta Chi, professional journalistic fraternity. His high scholarship at the University of Oregon and his popularity with his fellow students won him this honor last spring. In an interview published recently in "The Quill," fraternity publication, Mr. Chang said: "I shall do much to reform my paper. The editorials have been too high-flown for the general reader; the news has not been well-pointed, it has been too long, not well told."

Mr. Chang expects to spend about a year more in this country and several months in Europe and western Asia before returning to his editorial duties.

DAILY PRAISED FOR CRUSADE

New York Evening World Ends Sale of Obscene Matter to Children

A quiet crusade conducted by the New York Evening World caused the arrest early this week of two men, believed to be the source of salacious literature and pictures, peddled to public school children throughout Greater New York's five boroughs for several months.

The way the campaign was conducted brought praise from many sources. Children told the Evening World May 1, that sale of the obscene matter was going on. The daily obtained more information and concrete evidence and placed it in the hands of the police. No publicity was given the affair until after the arrests.

"Newspapers sometimes start crusades to increase sales and sometimes to get things done," was the comment of Oswald Garrison Villard, editor of the Nation. "The manner in which the Evening World has gone about this crusade proves its disinterestedness. It has acted quietly and got the forces of correction into action before advertising the evil, as so many censorship campaigns have done.

"This campaign of the Evening World's is as necessary as sewage disposal, and I am glad it is being so quietly and efficiently conducted."

Mining Is Leading Activity In West Virginia

The mining industry classified according to principal products are bituminous coal, petroleum and natural gas, limestone, sandstone and clay.

The leading mining industry of West Virginia is that of bituminous coal, in which West Virginia is outranked in production only by one state of much greater land area.

West Virginia ranks first in output of natural gas, gaining about $40,000,000 annually therefrom. In petroleum output it ranks eighth.

All workers in West Virginia, regardless of the industry, are paid good, substantial wages, and for the most part have steady work.

Here is an ideal field for advertisers. For a small appropriation you can be a BIG advertiser in West Virginia.

The cities listed here are the principal marketing and distribution centers of the State.

NEWSPAPERS "GRAND JURIES"

So Fresno (Cal.) Republican Editorial Declares

Asserting that "newspapers themselves are a form of grand jury," the Fresno (Cal.) Republican recently published an editorial in which the position was taken that newspaper proprietors should not be summoned for grand jury duty. The publishers of both Fresno newspapers were among the 30 citizens whose names were drawn.

"It is against public policy to have the editors or publishers of papers of general circulation put on grand juries," says the Republican's editorial. "The result of any such precedent, whatever might happen in this particular instance, would be detrimental to the public interest.

"It is well known that there has been expression of opinion, in the Republican for instance, of matters that are to come before the coming grand jury. On these matters the personal service of newspaper men in question on the grand jury would be at least ineffective. They might might have such a temperament as would permit them to act impartially. But they would not be above suspicion, either of positive bias, or of that equally bad result of 'standing up so straight as to lean backwards.' In either case the grand jury service of arriving at a fair basis for prosecution would be lacking.

"But there is a reason far more important than this for not placing the editors or publishers of newspapers on grand juries.

"Newspapers themselves are a form of grand jury. They do not merely publish the overt news. They search out the news. They ought, if they do their duty to the public, understand public situations in advance of the general knowledge of these situations that in fact is given to the public through them."

Converting Your Local Churches

ASSOCIATED ADVERTISING CLUBS OF THE WORLD — TRUTH

Churches in some towns are keenly alive to the opportunity of using paid space to stimulate church attendance. They realize that people are moved by the printed word, and they are glad to use this method of getting people to church.

In other towns constructive advertising by churches is not a new idea. Publishers can perform a helpful service if they will endeavor to persuade people interested in churches to pay for space which contains copy designed to attract people to worship.

Copy of this sort which has been used in a number of towns is available at a very small charge from the headquarters of the Church Advertising Department. Proofs will be sent on request.

Oratorical Contest Praised

May 8, 1925.

To EDITOR & PUBLISHER: Permit me to congratulate you on calling attention in your issue of May 2, to the notable public service of the newspapers which are promoting the National Oratorical Contest. Sometimes I think that not even the newspapers themselves fully realize the extent and value of their services. Besides interesting the young contestants and their parents in the United States Constitution the newspaper space given to the contest has interested all classes of readers. I know this by requests which reach me from dentists, lawyers, business men, farmers, freight brakemen, farm women and even Congressmen who have been inspired to learn more about the Constitution. While not officially connected with the Oratorical Contest, which began the movement and have been glad to co-operate.

The last sentence in your story gives a wrong impression. Thirty-three states have passed a law requiring the teaching of the Constitution, but not since the first Oratorical Contest. Iowa passed the law in 1921, Rhode Island in 1922, others passed in 1923 and 1924 and five states have passed it in 1925. The movement for the law was initiated by the National Security League and sponsored by the Bar Association. The Oratorical Contest is a result of, rather than a cause of, the passing of the law. Such an authority as EDITOR & PUBLISHER is, I am sure, desirous of the accuracy of all stories and will understand my calling attention to this matter.

WARNS OF OIL FRAUDS

W. P. Green, Vigilance Chief, Turns Attention to Colorado Fields

Public co-operation in an effort to prevent an anticipated flood of fradulent oil transactions, capitalizing upon the development of valuable oil territory in Colorado, is being urged by William P. Green, acting director of the National Vigilance Committee of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

Mr. Green pointed out that the National Vigilance Committee in New York already is in receipt of considerable literature from oil stock promotion companies in Colorado. Some of these companies may be legitimate, but the advertising of others shows evidences of fraud.

"Practically all of this literature," he stated, "is being sent through the United States mails. As yet little newspaper advertising has been attempted, because the promoters have discovered that reputable publications do not want their copy."

1893 SERVICE 1925

as visualized by

BENJAMIN & KENTNOR CO.

SERVICE TO PUBLISHERS, as we see it, means much more than merely getting business. That, of course, is important, but the caring for it, keeping it giving satisfaction, preventing mistakes that work harm, all enter into the service we render.

There are hundreds of ways, some of them seemingly unimportant, others of supreme importance, where we find chances to do things for publishers which increase revenue and make standing with advertisers — standing that counts.

Imperial

in the City of Tires

THE Imperial Plus Plan finds itself at home in Akron, inasmuch as the Plus Plan and the manufacturers of tires for which Akron is noted are aiming at the same goal. Tire manufacturers are making tires that will give the longest possible wearing life. The Plus Plan has for its aim the lengthening of the working life of type metals.

In Akron, the Beacon-Journal and Times-Press have been unanimous in choosing the Imperial Plus Metal Plan. They selected the plan to keep their metal FIT and thereby lengthen its life. The publishers of these splendid papers have taken a real step in the direction of reliability and economy in newspaper publishing.

Hundreds of publishers, large and small, many of whose papers have been featured in this column from time to time, are using the Plus Plan in their shop. The experience of these hundreds of publishers certainly should be an incentive for you to investigate this Plus Plan.

Get the Plan— Read it Through

The application of an economical systematic Plan to your metal will add years to its working life. Let us tell you how. Send for a copy of the plan now.

NEW ENGLAND DAILIES ELECT J. T. MURRAY

Business Manager, New Bedford (Mass.) Standard and Mercury Named President at One-Day Boston Convention

(Special to Editor & Publisher)

Boston, May 19.—James T. Murray, business manager of the New Bedford (Mass.) Standard and Mercury, was elected president of the New England Daily Newspaper Association at the annual meeting held at the Copley-Plaza Hotel here today. He succeeds Samuel E. Hudson, publisher of the Woonsocket (R. I.) Call.

Major Henry H. Conland, general manager of the Hartford (Conn.) Courant, was chosen vice-president. A. H. Fuller, publisher of the Brockton (Mass.) Enterprise, and James M Langley, publisher of the Concord (N. H.) Monitor-Patriot, were re-elected treasurer and secretary, respectively.

The board of governors chosen follows: Maine, William H. Dow, general manager, Portland Express-Advertiser; Massachusetts, Theodore T. Ellis, publisher Worcester Telegram and Gazette, and Robert T. Wright, publisher, Haverhill Gazette; New Hampshire, John A. Muehling, general manager, Manchester Union and Leader; Connecticut, William J. Pape, publisher, Waterbury Republican and American; Vermont, Howard C. Rice, publisher, Brattleboro Reformer; Rhode Island, George B. Utter, publisher Westerly Sun.

The meeting, an all day affair, was the largest attended one in the association's history, 58 being present. A meeting of the board of governors at 10 a. m. at which general topics of interest to the members were discussed, preceded the general business session. At the latter William N. Hardy, general manager, of the Bangor (Me.) Daily Commercial, was voted into membership.

Albert W. Fell, general manager of the association, submitted a report of the progress during the past year, 11 new members having joined. The membership now totals 72.

The committee on nominations comprising Harris M. Dolbeare, Wakefield (Mass.) Item, Frank E. Howe, Bennington (Vt.) Banner and Arthur S. Barnes, Bristol (Conn.) Press, brought in the list of new officers, who were unanimously elected.

The remainder of the morning session was devoted to general discussion.

At one p. m. an informal reception was tendered Roger W. Babson, of Babson's Statistical Institute, Wellesly, Mass., followed by luncheon.

Reporting a Rockefeller Wedding

Only one reporter was invited by the Rockfellers to enter their home during the wedding and reception of their daughter Abby Rockefeller, May 14, in New York. The newspaper men on the story chose Russell Porter of the New York Times, as their representative. Most of the information concerning the affair came from Ivy Lee, 111 Broadway.

Eldred Heads Beloit News

WHAT THEY ARE SAYING

THE RESPONSIBILITIES OF INTERPRETER

"THE day is at hand when the journalist more than ever must shoulder the responsibilities of interpreter. We chronicle the news, yes. So does radio. We influence public opinion, yes. So does the politician. We anize public opinion, yes. So does the propagandist. But to interpret the 's, to interpret our fellowmen one to the other, to interpret the nation to the ld, calls most of all for character."—James T. Williams, Editor, Boston erican.

CO-OPERATION AND ITS REWARDS

"MORE than we realize our people as a whole are organized and are co-operating constructively for the common good. This perhaps, comes ut easier under our form of government because every adult is a working t of the machinery of the government. We inherit with our citizenship practical theory of constructive co-operation. Having made so much use that endowment in the field of advertising we may boast of great progress, l we are entitled to do so. But if we had not made such progress in co-ration we would not have the rewards we have gained in our callings."—nes O'Shaughnessy, Executive Secretary, American Association of Ad-tising Agencies.

SALESMANSHIP AND PRINTING

"WHAT we need in American selling is more ideas—selling ideas—not more art. We are away ahead in the artistic development of print-. The cost of printing is already too high. Printing is not an end in lf—it is only a means to an end. And that end is more sales with selling ts at a lower percentage."—G. C. Willings, Vice-President, Intertype rporation.

MANUFACTURER'S GREATEST ASSET

"I CONSIDER newspaper advertising the best of all advertising mediums and the greatest asset a manufacturer can avail himself of in popularizing products with the public and making his name a household word."—John hl, John Puhl Products Company, Chicago.

A 15 PER CENT AD BUDGET

"A REAL estate firm should spend at least 15 per cent of the gross commission on newspaper advertising because it will increase business. * * Advertising is the strongest spotlight in the world and no big venture n be a success without it."—D. Bradlee Rich, Former Vice-President, tional Association of Real Estate Boards, Before Springfield Real Estate ard.

NEW PROBLEMS

"THE raising of educational standards, the tremendous increase in travel, the growing knowledge of the outside world and other elements affect-our tastes, our desires and our demands have put new problems before wspaper publishers, problems that must be solved right if disaster is to be oided."—Frank O. Edgecombe, Publisher, Geneva (Neb.) Signal.

NEWSPAPERS MUST KEEP FAITH

"THE modern newspaper must keep faith with the public. There must be no exploitation of the reader or reader interest. To make a newspaper pay it must be honest with the public. The moral issue cannot be too ongly stressed."—Walter A. Strong, Business Manager, Chicago Daily ews.

FIRST PRIZE: ONE TOMBSTONE

S. D. Daily Offers a Casket, Too, for "Best Motor Maniac"

Stepping into the limelight of safety first advocates, the Sioux Falls (S. D.) Press, morning newspaper, has started a contest for the "best motor maniac" in the state, offering a first prize of a tombstone and a second prize of a casket.

A variety of other prizes for those motorists in the state who "fail" to qualify as the "best motor maniac" will be given, providing relatives of the driver will make the claim.

Numerous fatalities in the state within recent weeks has prompted the management of the Press to start its unusual contest. Each day the daily will print stories, omitting names, of incidents in which motorists "attempt" to qualify for first or other places in the contest.

Intoxicated drivers will be watched by the newspaper, as well as those who step on the gas when nearing a school ground, and those who try to pass another car at a street or highway intersection, or who race with trains.

Fred C. Christopherson, formerly of the Kansas City Star, is managing editor of the Press. He is father of the idea. George E. Masters, formerly of the Chicago Journal and recently of the Tokio Japan Advertiser, is city editor.

Many editors have already commented favorably on the novelty of the campaign, declaring it to be an effective way to decrease motor fatalities.

LAKELAND TO ADVERTISE

Florida City Raises $70,000 For Newspaper and Magazine Space

As a result of a successful campaign, which has just closed, the Lakeland Chamber of Commerce will expand between $70,000 and $75,000 on advertising the city during the next year, according to a statement by John L. Morris, local director of publicity. This will be the first year that Lakeland has ever advertised extensively.

During the campaign just closed, the goal of $100,000 was shattered and $115,000 was raised for the operation of the chamber during the next fiscal year.

According to Mr. Morris, the bulk of the sum will be expanded in the advertisements to appear in the leading newspapers and magazines throughout the country. The advertising is to be released on schedule, the first copy to start running in September.

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

FROM the Chicago Daily News comes another booklet in its series of reprints—"Pillars of World Peace" by Edward Price Bell. In this interview Mackenzie King, Prime Minister of Canada, discusses the problem of the Pacific and gives a formula for interracial good relations.

I may be guilty of overemphasizing crime in this department as much as some newspapers do in their text columns but I cannot overlook a passing mention of Booklet No. 6 in this series by the Daily News—"Crime and the Civic Cancer" by Judge M. L. McKinley.

Copies of either of these reprints may be obtained from the Chicago Daily News, 15 North Wells street, Chicago, at 10 cents each.

WILLIAM JOHNSTON has been one of the editors of the New York World for 25 years. Those who know him well say that Bill is a newspaper man from shoe leather to felt hat. Bill has written a dozen or so books but his latest, "These Women!" (The Cosmopoltian Book Corporation) starts something. It discusses the modern matrimonial question pro and con.

One of Bill's observations is that any man who has a good wife and doesn't pay her a salary isn't a good business man. Bill hasn't written something just to fill space. Best of all, no editor has edited his copy.

THE Iowa Journalist, a monthly periodical published by the School of Journalism of the University of Iowa, opens with "The Business Side of a Newspaper" by W. R. Orchard, editor of the Council Bluffs (Ia.) Nonpareil and concludes with the second installment its series of articles on "Crime and the Newspapers."

IN America, a Catholic periodical which admirably reviews the news of the week, will be found for May 16 an interesting discussion of news values. It is as critical of the public as it is of the press.

* * *

E. W. HOWE of Potato Hill Farm, Atchison, Kan., is frequently a little late in putting his monthly—devoted to indignation and information—to bed. The issue which has just reached my desk contains several items relating to journalism. Page 1, Column 1, leads off with a little chat about "The Great Reporters."

Another item is headed "A Pimple to Watch." Lest this pimple fester it might be worthwhile to read what Mr. Howe says:

> Every smart newspaper man probably realizes he has a fight before him;
> Congress is showing a disposition to regulate him;
> The people are complaining of newspaper dominance: at every session of Congress, lately, newspaper regulation is whispered about.
> This was not formerly the case: we used to call the newspaper game Disseminating Intelligence.
> It is often said the saloon keepers dug their own graves by making their bars too gaudy; by engaging too freely in politics; by selling to minors; by too ostentatiously showing their power and wealth; by promoting disorder, etc.
> Is there not here a suggestion for intelligent newspaper men? They have acquired tremendous power. Are they making the best use of it? On the nose of every newspaper man there is a pimple liable to grow if not taken care of.

Mr. Howe is again critical of the press in the squib which he headlines "An Interesting News Item Is So Often Untrue."

AMERICAN newspaper men who want to know how a German newspaper is edited and made should get the little book "Wie Entsteht Eine Zeitung" ("How Does a Newspaper Take Form?") by Dr. Hans Simon (Dürr & Weber, Leipzig, Germany). The sub-title "Tagebuchblätter eines Redakteurs" ("Diary Leaves of an Editor") describes the contents of the volume.

The description of the beginnings of journalism betrays a lack of scholarship and research, but the chapters which deal with modern policies, foreign correspondence, the morgue, editorial conferences, party politics and the press, are well done and show that their author is familiar with the ground covered. The chapter on "Editorial Organization" possibly has the most interest for the American reader.

THE OUTLOOK in its issue for May 20 prints a page of cartoons on the topic of Crime in the Newspapers. Cartoons are taken from the Seattle Daily Times, Rochester Herald, St. Paul Pioneer Press, and the Rocky Mountain News. The Outlook, by the way, pays a dollar to everyone who clips from his favorite newspaper and sends in a cartoon that is reprinted. The cartoon submitted must contain the name of the paper and its date of publication. Here is a chance for newspaper men to have cigars on the Outlook.

AMONG the weekly periodicals the subject of crime and the news is still popular. The Nation, for example, in its issue for May 20 attempts to answer the question "Should Crime Stories Be Suppressed?" For once, mirabile dictu, the Nation is a critic of the critics as this quotation will show:

> Some of the severest critics of crime news are members of our churches and devoted readers of the Bible. Do they forget that the Bible is perhaps the world's greatest compilation of crime? Any reform, it is admitted, must be preceded by a knowledge of the facts. An understanding of crime, a study of the motives and passions which direct men, is essential to anyone who would know his fellows or work for their betterment.

Of the critics who suggest suppression or sterilization, the Nation says:

> Those who are most passionately advocating a suppression or sterilization of crime news are generally persons who like to call themselves "constructive." Yet in this respect they are championing purely destructive tactics; they are ignoring the one practicable way to improvement, which consists not in demanding that newspapers eliminate or segregate news of crime but that they write about it truthfully. Failure to do this, either deliberate or carelessly unintentional, is the real evil. When our newspapers are disgusting, degrading, and dangerous—as some undoubtedly are—it is not because they print news of crime but because they sentimentalize and distort it, because they garnish it with all the vulgar tricks of the "sob sister" and the rewrite man, because they dramatize it according to the hack rules of the hero-villain theory of life.

But the Nation can't resist this parting shot:

> When we achieve the Perfect World we shall banish crime from our newspapers. But by then we shall be ready to banish the newspapers also.

WILLIAM DUDLEY PELLEY began his newspaper career in the back office as pressman on the Bennington (Vt.) Evening Banner. He had his eye, however, on the front office, so he rented an old typewriter and began to pound out copy which soon found its way into the columns of the Banner. Later he became a country editor but, finding that his stories about country life found a ready market in metropolitan magazines, he gave up newspaper work for a short time. The opportunity, however, to buy the St. Johnsbury (Vt.) Daily Caledonian proved a greater temptation than he could withstand and so he became the owner of that paper. Then came the War and he went to Siberia as a Y. M. C. A. secretary.

After the War he returned to newspaper work but the success of his books "The Greater Glory" and "The Fog" proved that he had a greater opportunity in the field of authorship and so he definitely gave up newspaperdom as a vocation.

His latest novel "Drag" (Little, Brown & Co.) is a remarkable human interest story in which the author has capitalized his newspaper experiences. The account of David Haskell's first day on the Daily Telegraph of Paris, Vermont, is the most amusing thing that I have read about newspaper life in many a day. David Haskell, like Dav Harum, is a real creation that ought live in American fiction. Allie Park who reads proof for the Daily Te graph, successfully sets her trap for D vid and then the tale begins—also tro bles for David from his wife's relativ who come to live with him.

How David finally solved his mat monial problems does not belong to t little chat. To put them in might sp the perusal of the story. But David c tainly had some interesting experien while working on a newspaper in Sprin field, Mass.

Mr. Pelley says that "Drag" is a co edy. But his tale is so faithful a portr of real life, so full of little tragedi that his description hardly seems jus fied. The author, however, has d such a fine piece of work in his no that one is glad that he belongs to "O Own World of Letters."

ICTOR FIRM ENTERS RADIO BUSINESS

eased Advertising Expected to Result from Contract Signed with Radio Corporation of America Announced in New York

ncrease in the volume of Victor Talk- Machine Company advertising is ex- ted to result from the firm's entrance the radio business, announced in w York, May 19.

he announcement was that a con- t had been signed between the Radio poration of America and the Victor npany, providing that the former con- n will manufacture superheterodyne eivers to be installed as part of the trola.

Victor officials also stated at the same e the company would resume radio adcasting next winter.

ndications are this broadcasting will done through WJZ, the Radio corpo- ion of America, and a chain of allied nsmitters, including several operated the General Electric Company and Westinghouse Electric and Manufac- ing Company, instead of, as last ter, through WEAF of the American lephone and Telegraph Company.

The Victor Talking Machine Company, big user of newspaper space, has nged its advertising policy somewhat s year. While for the past seven years vertising plans were thoroughly pre- red in advance, space buying has been ceeding with unusual reserve.

Ernest John, advertising manager, when questioned in regard to this change of policy by EDITOR & PUBLISHER last March, declared the Victor Company wished to be "leg-free to put huge sums to work in the spreading of several important announcements later on," and was accumulating a reserve fund for this purpose.

This week Mr. John informed EDITOR & PUBLISHER, the New York announcement would mean an increase in advertising expenditure out of this reserve fund.

Pressed for details as to how the combined Victrola and radio receiving set would be advertised, Mr. John said it was too early yet to be definite.

Announcement of the contract with the Radio Corporation was made at a dinner given by Victor officials at the Pennsylvania Hotel, New York.

Among those present to hear the announcement were: E. R. F. Johnston, vice president of the Victor Talking Machine Company; C. Q. Childs, advisory director; General Guy E. Tripp, chairman of the board of directors of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company; H. P. Davis, vice president of that company, and Dr. A. N. Goldsmith, chief broadcast engineer of the Radio Corporation of America.

The Radio Corporation of America has been supplying the radio equipment for the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company for over a year. The super-heterodyne has been included in the Brunswick combination machine. J. L. Bernard of the Radio Corporation of America said that they would continue to manufacture sets for the Brunswick Company.

What Good Roads Have Done For

ILLINOIS

Illinois owes much of her commercial and industrial importance throughout the Middle West, to her roads. Not only have her highways reached a point of development that make for excellent vehicle transportation but her chains of steam and electric railroads are so closely and firmly linked that all parts of Illinois as well as adjacent states have become mere "next door neighbors."

Such an existing condition of communication and transportation is certain to mean unparalleled success for any advertising campaign that is launched within the borders of Illinois. The effect of such advertising is bound to be felt far and wide.

The problem of merchandising in this territory has become very simple for the reason of the complete communication between points and their accessibility.

Even as the roads link places so also do the newspapers listed here do their share in linking advertisers and consumers.

NION MEN STRIKE ON ANGOR COMMERCIAL

eteen Compositors and Three Press- nen Walk Out When Paper Seeks to Discharge an Employe— New Force Recruited

When the management of the Bangor e.) Commercial announced its inten- to discharge a union employe in open shop composing room, 19 union n employed in the room and three on pressmen walked out last week.

No demands were made upon the pa- and no attempt by either side has n made to discuss the matter accord- to William N. Hardy, general man- gr.

The paper was issued the day of the ke an hour and a half late and has n out every day since, sometimes on ie and sometimes a few minutes late. . Hardy stated that the paper missed y one mail. There has been no no- iable loss of advertising and the man- ment reports no drop in circulation, he id.

The local union issued a circular which s distributed from house to house in ich they stated there was no dispute ept the one involving the threatened charge of a union employe, discrimin- on being charged.

"Efforts had been made to organize the nmercial mechanical departments and matter was under negotiation at the ie of the walkout," Mr. Hardy de- red. "Help has been brought in from outside and gradually a new force being installed.

"The Commercial at no time has men- ned the strike in its columns. There n been no violence."

Organizer Fred A. Spead is in charge the strike for the union.

MUNSEY HONORS OLD-TIMER

Cves Watch to Pressman 50 Years on N. Y. Sun

Frank Munsey, in his luxurious apart- nt at the Ritz the other day, discussed w York newspaper history with illiam French, a pressman on his New ork Sun, whom he presented a watch in preciation of his 50 years' service on t newspaper.

"Fifty years is a long time," Bill smiled. ome men feel it, but I don't. I feel as ung today as I did when I first went to ork.

"But my how things have changed!"

When French first went to work the n printed one four-page edition six ys a week. Now it is not unusual for press room to turn out ten or twelve itions a day. The presses are capable printing a 64-page edition at one opera n.

"This has been the biggest day of my le," said French, as he left the Ritz th Edwin S. Friendly, business man- er of the Sun.

ALMOST every automobile dealer has a few used cars on his hands. And the demand for such merchandise is pretty small nowadays. Of course, a few of the used cars are salable but there is a great amount of "junk" on hand. This accumulation of used cars will bring in a little "ready cash" if placed on auction sale. Large dealers have found it profitable to hold individual auctions while co-operative auctions held by smaller dealers will draw a large crowd. This gives the public an opportunity to set the price on the used cars and one would be surprised at the interest shown in bidding.

GRADE school children are taught about insurance these days, questions relating to insurance being found in their arithmetic books. This is true of schools in nearly all states. Why not take a bunch of these insurance questions out of a seventh-grade arithmetic, head them with some such question as, "Can You Answer These? Your Child Can," and pull some good insurance advertising through these questions. Lots of adults can't answer the questions, first shot, that the children are learning these days.—Miss Prue Jones.

Every time a non-advertising store goes out of business—a quite frequent occurrence—have the staff photographer get a picture. Have him get in the sign and, if possible, get a photograph that will show the empty interior. When a half-dozen or so have been collected, run them in a quarter or half-page layout labeled something like this: "Gone and Forgotten—These Businesses Did Not advertise." Your advertising solicitors will know how to use it.—T. A. Hulbert.

A New Jersey newspaper makes a charge for listings under "Coming Events." Forget just what it is, but let us say $5 per month. Almost every event in town appears in the column. This is the only paper I ever knew to make such a charge, but why not? In that city social, fraternal and other organizations like it and it really saved them money, doing away with the necessity of sending out postal cards.—K. Dangerfield.

A Salem, Mass., newspaper has used with much success a series of advertisements dealing with Mothers' Day, which may be used just as well on any other "day." Candy stores, telegraph and telephone companies, florists, theatres, restaurants, department stores, gift shops, book stores, etc., have tied up with the ads which have brought good business. One of the ads reads as follows: "Flowers for mother on Mother's Day are the usual thing, but this year the sons and daughters of America are going farther. They not only are sending candy and flowers and books to mother, and telegrams and telephone calls to her if they are away, but they also are taking her out to dinners, to parties, and to the theatre. Take mother out this week to the theatre, to dinner, and give her as many more good times as you can."—C. L. Moody.

Under a heading "Where to Spend Your Week-Ends," a feature could be run calling attention to boating and fishing facilities, and giving directions for hikers and campers. This could be supplemented with a directory of sports outfitters.—Hyman Gershon.

One Florida newspaper has been photographing automobile license plates at random and then reproducing them. If the autoist sees his auto tag in print he should bring his registration card to the editorial department where he will be given an order for five gallons of his favorite motor fuel.—Robert B. Miller.

Suggest to the leading magazine dealer in your city that early in the month he run a special display ad giving an outline of the more serious—"high-brow"—magazines, those selling at 35 to 50 cents. Each month these have a wide variety of special articles and in every town or city there are many people who would buy one or more a month if they knew there was something of special interest in them but are kept from purchasing them regularly because of the high price.—A. N.

YOUR Face Someone's Fortune—Both Sides of It. Male reporter made discovery that much money is spent by women in beauty parlors. Woman reporter found that it's nothing compared with what men spend in barber shops. Both wrote parallel stories for an Ohio paper.—E. N. Reese.

A genuine back-to-the-farm movement, resulting in an increase of from 40 to 50 per cent in farm transactions, is being noted this year, Herman Janss, director of the farm lands division of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, declared recently. The stabilization of prices for farm products together with the end of war depression have brought about a great improvement. Large city papers may find it of interest to learn if persons are going back to farms, while publications in rural sections will find a chance to get in some effective booster stories.—A. C. Regli.

Print every day with a cut a short article of from three to five paragraphs under the head "Our Principals" and you will have an interesting daily feature which can be obtained without much trouble. This feature in the Minneapolis Tribune is proving popular. The feature can be extended to include, for instance, "Our Aldermen," "Our Ministers," etc.—G. Smedal, Jr.

With Decoration Day nearly here, your local G. A. R. post will cooperate on an article about number of veterans' graves and who was first member of post to die. Also, if their graves are being marked with G. A. R. markers, this will add. We got a fine story last year in this way that beat all the boiler-plate Decoration Day stories.—Donald O. Ross.

"Iowa People and Affairs" is the caption over a brief column of personal comment and reminiscences of Iowan appearing in the Des Moines (Ia.) Register. Natives of the state and their achievements, amusing and illuminating anecdotes of prominent personages all over the state and similar comment fill out a feature that is widely read.—L.

A Youngstown paper recently ran a feature story about the picture post cards of the city being sold in the stores. Most of the pictures were taken from 10 to 15 years previous. Almost unbelievable changes had been made in that time.—G. L. B.

Nearly every large high school has occasionally a young cartoonist who can do stuff that can't be frowned at. If you can find one in your high school put him to work during the summer making caricatures of local people. He will be a better circulation holder during the off months of vacation season than the syndicate artist.—A. Nix, Spokane, Wash.

New York Daily Newspapers give both QUANTITY of circulation and QUALITY of circulation—a winning combination.

New York has everything to make an ideal market—people, money, efficient transportation and plenty of QUALITY newspapers. As a tryout market New York is one of the best territories possible to find in the whole United States.

The daily newspapers listed above are sold on the idea of cooperation. They cooperate with one another in boosting the State of New York as the greatest market on earth.

They cooperate with the powers that be in their own communities in making their home towns the best places on earth in which to live. They cooperate with their local merchants in keeping their business in their home towns as much as possible.

They cooperate with national manufacturers in popularizing trade-marked goods—cooperating in every possible way.

Cooperate With Local Dealers Through the Above Daily Newspapers

Efficient

The fifty-five dominant newspapers which acquired the day leased wire service of The Consolidated Press did so because their publishers desired more complete newspapers. They did not contemplate using more space, but using that space more efficiently and economically.

Comprehensive

The concise, complete dispatches of the C. P. A., written by acknowledged experts, telling the how and the why as well as the what, can be substituted effectively for scattered, meaningless, space-eating stories.

Constructive

The trained writers of the C. P. A. build for its newspapers a consistent reader-interest as well as an unquestioned prestige.
